Spain Informed That They Will Be Taken.

Debt Incurred for Improvements Will Be Assumed.

PARIS, Oct. 31.—The American peace commissioners, each of them carrying a portfolio containing records and personal memoranda, left their headquarters in the Continental Hotel for the meeting with the Spanish commissioners at the foreign office shortly before 1 o'clock this afternoon. The health of the president of the Spanish commission, Senor Montero Rios, had improved to the extent of enabling him to attend today's meeting. He arrived at the foreign office in a closed carriage, with his colleagues, shortly after the Americans reached the meeting place. Soon after 2 o'clock the ten commissioners confronted each other across the table on which, in 1783, Benjamin Franklin and his colleagues signed the treaty of independence of the United States.

The day was black with dying clouds, fitful sunshine, whirling leaves and raw air.

The American commissioners presented a written expression of the purpose of the United States to take the entire group of Philippine islands and to assume such proportion of the Philippine debt as has been spent for the benefit of the islands or their inhabitants in public works, improvements and permanent betterments. It was also set forth that the United States would not assume any part of the Philippine debt which had been incurred by Spain for the furtherance of military or naval operations to quell insurrections of the natives.

The session was eventually adjourned until Friday, in order to give the Spaniards time to prepare a reply. The session today lasted a little over an hour.

COAL STRIKE LEADERS SHOT.

Fresh Trouble Feared with the Non-Union Men as a Result.

WASHINGTON DEPOT, Ind., Oct. 31.—Richard Reibmeister and Lon Ragsdale, coal strike leaders, have been shot by Austin Kocher, a non-union miner, who claims that Ragsdale tried to hit him with a brick and that Reibmeister offered to strike him. Kocher fired five shots, two of them taking effect in Ragsdale's neck and one in Reibmeister's side. Ragsdale is seriously hurt. Kocher was arrested. It is feared the affair will cause fresh trouble between the strikers and non-union men.

Fall River Child Crushed by a Car.

FALL RIVER, Mass., Oct. 31.—A six-year-old son of Joseph St. Germain, Eighth street, was crushed to death under a trolley car on Pleasant street this morning.

ELECTRIC CARS COLLIDE.

Both Motormen in a Providence Accident May Die.

PROVIDENCE, Oct. 31. Two Chalkstone avenue electrics met in a head-on collision in Pleasant valley this afternoon, the accident resulting in injuries to the motormen that may be fatal in either case, and in serious injury to half a dozen other persons. Both of the cars were wrecked—torn to pieces forward of the truck. Those injured are: David H. Northrup, motorman, 113 Reservoir avenue, one leg fractured; injuries to other leg, and probable internal injuries—he may recover; Byron P. Greene, motorman, Rutland avenue, skull fractured, other injuries—cannot recover; Mrs. Elizabeth Bleisitzer of 644 Chalkstone avenue, cut about the face and hands by flying glass; condition serious, but she will recover; Mrs. Daniel Kelley of 91 Canton street, injured about the head and back—not serious; Alderman James H. McGann of Kepler street, leg injured; unknown woman, cut by glass, leg injured—she went home; William L. Valletie of 202 Stanwood street and Dorr E. Taylor of 38 Lawton street, conductors, suffered slightly from shock.

The accident was the most serious affair in which the railroad has figured in a number of years. Its cause appears to have been a defective brake. Both of the motormen did all in their power to avert the collision, sticking bravely to their posts until the crash came.

When the cars met it was with almost the force with which two locomotives would come together. They met in a hollow, each at the end of a down grade. Their dashers, platforms and hoods were interlocked, one car was thrown from the track, and the air was filled with flying glass and splintered wood. Within the wreckage lay the forms of the two motormen, whose blood quickly stained the dashers, and long after the two electrics had been towed away, marked the spot where the cars came together.

NOT VERY SUCCESSFUL.

Hargraves Mill in Fall River Running in Spite of the Strike.

FALL RIVER, Mass., Oct. 31.—The strike against overtime running at the Hargraves mill was not eminently successful today. The mule spinners who struck last week were joined by twenty-six female employes of the carding room, and by one weaver. The rest of the help remained at work, and Agent Borden says that the mill will run at night, according to the plan announced.

At the Barnaby mill a number of weavers appeared this morning, but there were not enough to make running profitable. It was announced that the mill will remain closed until the strike is declared off.

France Will Recall Marchand from Fashoda.

Then with Russia Will Raise the Whole Egyptian Question.

PARIS, Oct. 31.—The Eclair today says it learns on reliable authority that the Fashoda question will be settled favorably to Great Britain by the recall of Major Marchand. France, the paper adds, yields all, reserving only the question of the right to the Bahr-El-Ghazal district, which she does not consider as belonging to Egypt.

Continuing, the Eclair says: "M. Delcasse, however, has now decided to raise the whole Egyptian question, which should have been done from the first, thus avoiding the humiliation of yielding to the British ultimatum. When the question is thus enlarged France will not be alone in its discussion with the Marquis of Salisbury. Egypt interests all the powers. Russia has promised M. Delcasse its most effective assistance and, besides, Germany has the biggest interest, in view of her East African possessions and trade in the far East, that the Suez canal should not become exclusively British, and is disposed to support Franco-Russian arguments for a definite settlement of the Egyptian question."

FITTING SHIPS FOR SEA.

British Naval Activity Continues at Halifax and Esquimault.

HALIFAX, N. S., Oct. 31.—Every available shipwright in this city has been engaged by the naval authorities here, and orders have been given to prepare the battleships and other vessels for sea as soon as possible. Saturday the men worked all day, a thing unprecedented in the dockyards here. The great activity displayed is the result of messages from the home authorities.

Battleship Renown, cruisers Pelican and Cordelia, gunboat Columbine and two torpedo boats are now here being fitted out as rapidly as possible. So they have not been ordered away but instructions are hourly expected.

VICTORIA, B. C., Oct. 31.—The departure of Her Majesty's ship Amphion Sunday for the Society islands, the French colony in the south seas, did not end the activity at the Esquimault naval station. As soon as she left the wharf at the dockyard, the dockyard crew was detailed to get the dry dock in readiness for the reception of Her Majesty's ship Leander. She, too, is to go on a long voyage, or at least be in readiness for any duty that she may be called upon to perform.

The most significant feature, aside from the departure of the Amphion, however, is the activity on Her Majesty's ship Imperieuse, Admiral Palliser's flagship. Sunday a large number of men were given shore leave, a very unusual thing on Sundays, and this morning she commenced coaling. It is understood that she will go out under orders Thursday.

EXCHANGES GLOOMY.

Both in London and Paris the Markets Are Depressed.

LONDON, Oct. 31.—There was an unexpectedly gloomy feeling this morning on the stock exchange and the Paris Bourse, both of these markets being influenced, it is inferred, from the aggressive tone of some of the French papers. Besides this, something extraordinary seems to have happened, and it looks as if a crisis is approaching.

The British naval preparations are certainly being pushed with great activity. The British emergency squadron is gathering at Davenport with all possible speed. Seven battleships and one cruiser have thus far been designated to join this squadron, officers and sailors have been hurriedly recalled from leave of absence, several battleships and cruisers at Portsmouth are taking their full crews on board, and other warlike preparations are being made.

SUPPOSED RUSSIAN SPY.

Arrested While Seeking Information at a British Fort.

LONDON, Oct. 31.—A number of signal men now on duty with the British channel squadron, which arrived at Gibraltar this morning, have been ordered home for service, it is presumed, on board the auxiliary cruisers, if the latter should be required for active service.

A sensation has been caused by the arrest this morning of a supposed Russian spy at a fort near Harwich. The man was already under surveillance, and went to a redoubt, where he tried to obtain information from a sentry regarding the fortifications. He was promptly arrested, and inquiries are being made regarding his antecedents.

It was also asserted today that the commanding officers of the London volunteer regiments had received orders to prepare for immediate mobilization, and it is said that the different artillery corps have been informed as to the forts on the southern and eastern coasts to which they have been allotted.

The Pall Mall Gazette this afternoon says: "England has been, and even now is, so near war that the government has carried its preparations to the furthest limit of the preparatory stage. It has been arranged to call out the reserves and militia, to mobilize the volunteers simultaneously, and to form large camps at various important railroad junctions, where rolling stock and locomotives will be concentrated."

CELEBRATED ENGLISH ACTRESS.

Death of Helen Faucit, Lady Martin, Long Retired from the Stage.

LONDON, Oct. 31.—Helen Faucit (Lady Martin), a celebrated English actress, who retired from the stage many years ago, is dead. She was born in 1820 and was married in 1851 to Sir Thomas Martin, K. C. B.

Helen Faucit was a daughter of Mrs. Faucit, an actress of considerable repute. She made her debut in London, at Covent Garden, January 5, 1836, in the character of Julia in the "Hunchback." Miss Faucit was the original representative of the heroines in Lord Lytton's "Lady of Lyons," "Money," "The Sea Captain," "Richelieu," "Duchesse De La Valliere," and others, and won distinguished renown for her interpretation of Shakespearean roles.

Collier Celtic Arrives at Bahia.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 31. The Celtic, one of the colliers which is accompanying battleships Oregon and Iowa on their voyage to Honolulu, put in at Bahia today and cabled notice of her arrival to the department. It is expected at the department that the battleships will be at Bahia in a day or two.

Commissioner Peck Presented to President Faure.

PARIS, Oct. 31.—The United States ambassador, General Horace Porter, this morning presented to President Faure Mr. Ferdinand W. Peck, United States commissioner to the Paris exposition of 1900, and the the latter's colleagues.

War Investigating Commission at Camp Poland.

CAMP POLAND, Knoxville Tenn., Oct. 31.—Nine members of the war investigating commission party reached Knoxville yesterday. They visited the division hospital and examined closely into the provisions made for caring for the sick and the method of treatment adopted; also the condition of the inmates. A number of convalescents were asked for. No comment relative to the hospital was made by the commissioners, except that it was an admirable location for the camp. This concluded the day's work, and the commissioners returned to their private cars to prepare for today's duties.

THE EVOLUTION OF A PARIS GOWN.

The Paris gown, that bursts full blown on the eye of the client, is not, as the public believes, a creation of the great dressmaker himself, nor is the great dressmaker responsible for the fashion. This model gown is the result of an almost infinite collaboration. Up in the garrets of the criss-cross streets live a modest class of artists that make projects. They get their inspiration from old portraits at the Louvre, at Versailles, from elegant women in the driveways of the Bois, or from some hazard. They modify, develop, combine, following a draft which they do not control, until they have produced a novel idea that the public is likely to accept, and that is therefore salable. Their projects are fixed in sketches, and they are known as marchands de croquis. Others of the specialists make up their projects in cloth, and are known as marchands de modeles. These occupy a more important rank than the first, since the models form a demonstration that the ideas can be realized. The model merchant is in relation with the manufacturers, who provide her with the new materials they have imagined, and whose interest it is to have their "truck" presented to the great dressmaking houses and so launched on the market.—[Ada Cone, in Scribner's.

NEW IDEALS RESULTING FROM THE WAR.

However much we may lament it, and however much we may succeed in limiting it, we must all agree that the war cannot leave us as it found us; that it has thrust upon us something that, in comparison with our past policy, may be called imperial; that, for a time at least, we must administer the affairs of alien races in distant lands. It is consoling to recognize any compensation that this prospect involves; to assure ourselves that if it be evil it is not of an unmixed evil.

The imperial spirit is at least an effective set-off against the mercantile spirit, against which the philosophic essayists and the Commencement orators have been warning us for half a century. In spite of the admonitions, it has been steadily growing, until the ambition of riches is the only form of distinction which appeals to the common American. Literature and art do not take hold of him. Half a century ago public life offered a distinct set-off to the tyranny of "the business man." A boy might propose to himself to be rich or to be a Senator. Now the two aspirations are fused. The readiest, and perhaps the cleanest, road to the Senate is through riches.

It is in favor of war, it is in favor even of imperialism, that it does set up an effective counterbalance to the one American ambition; that it substitutes in the successful soldier or sailor, afterward possibly even in the successful administrator, a figure more susceptible of picturesque presentation than that of the business man. When the business man gets himself a statue, even if it be not at his own expense or that of his posterity, it is seen that he is not available for that kind of commemoration. The irreverent populace which envied him living jeers at his effigy, and walks around the corner to consider much more seriously the statue of a general or an admiral.—[Inter arma negotia silent.—[November Scribner's.

RELATIVE VALUE OF VARIOUS TYPES OF WARSHIPS.

The first development of importance in the war with Spain was the great inadequacy of the monitor type to the service attempted. These ships had no quality whatever in their favor under such conditions; their coal supply was very limited, their speed was low (as it must always be in such a type), they were hells of suffering to their crews, who bore their discomforts most heroically; and, above all, their rapid period of oscillation made them such poor gun platforms that accurate shooting from them, unless the water was perfectly smooth, was impossible. I have no hesitancy in saying that our experience condemned them unqualifiedly for general service; it is a type for smooth harbor use only.

The good estimate of the large armored cruiser, and battleship, on the other hand, became quickly accentuated, ships of the New York and Brooklyn type, with their heavy gun-fire, high speed, great radius of action and very fair armor protection, have shown themselves to be a primal necessity of a well-organized naval force. The New York, for instance, could easily keep the sea a month without coaling; could spring at any time to 13 or 14 knots, and, in a short time, to 17 or 18; was equal to meeting, on fair terms, anything short of a heavily armored battleship, and developed altogether a general utility, which speaks in strongest terms for her type. The battleships are misplaced on an ordinary blockade, such as that off Havana, but had to be so used, owing to our paucity of material. It was using a sledge hammer to crack a nut—but their value shone, with brightest lustre, at once when the blockade of the enemy's fleet in Santiago was established. Though ships of the New York class were quite the equal of the Vizcaya and, under the conditions of her partial disarmament, of the Cristobal Colon (she did not have her two 10-inch turret guns), the battleships were those which enabled the searchlight to illuminate the harbor entrance so that, as Admiral Cervera himself said, it made it impossible for him to leave at night.—[F. E. Chadwick, in Scribner's.

This Morning's News.

AT A CRITICAL POINT.

Spanish Commissioners May Leave the Conference.

PARIS, Oct. 30.—Senor Rios, president of the Spanish peace commission, is ill. This causes some doubt this evening as to whether there will be a joint session of the commissions tomorrow. If he is unable to attend, it is unlikely that the Spaniards would consent to enter the conference to take up the Philippine question for initial consideration.

There is a strong impression, which has been growing here recently, that the Spaniards, upon receiving definite assurances of the American determination to take the entire Philippine group, would quit the conference, and all negotiations are modified by the attitude of the Spanish newspapers arriving here today. These are found to have wheeled into line with the Epoca of October 27, which demanded that the Spanish commissioners should sign a treaty in Paris, no matter how onerous the conditions imposed by the Americans.

Nevertheless, despite this attitude of the Madrid press, and despite the denial given Friday last to the correspondent of the Associated Press by a Spanish commissioner, who denied that the Spaniards had any intention of withdrawing, the Americans here will not be surprised if one or more of the Spanish commissioners resign and practically close the negotiations.

This feeling is based upon the fact that Senor Rios, early last week, would have resigned, if his so doing would not have imperilled the Sagasta ministry, and the reasoning is that if, while pressing the Cuban debt, which is not mentioned in the protocol and which the Spanish commissioners insist should not be left to Spain alone, Senor Rios were inclined to resign, he might, in the open field of contention as to the Philippines, feel that resignation would help Senor Sagasta, on the ground that the demand of the United States for the entire Philippine group would be extortionate.

It is believed here tonight, on the eve of taking up the main question, that the Spanish commissioners are not likely to acquiesce here in any treaty that the Americans would sign.

HAS FULL POWERS.

Court of Cassation's Review May Reveal the Truth.

PARIS, Oct. 30.—The court of cassation has decided to grant a revision of the Dreyfus case, and will institute a supplementary investigation. After M. Mornard had closed his argument the court retired to deliberate, and two and a half hours later rendered its decision.

By this decision the court of cassation obtains the most absolute control over the Dreyfus case. It may demand and examine any documents whatever, including the dossier, of any case bearing upon the Dreyfus matter, and may examine, under oath, any witness, however high his position. In short, if the court makes a sincere use of its powers, the truth will have a much better chance of being discovered than would have been the case had it merely ordered revision before another court-martial, whose members might have been actuated by a desire to shield the general staff. Having concluded its inquiry, it can present a new dossier to either a civil or a military court for the final decision.

Its proceedings will not be public, and there can therefore be no objection to a communication to it of the alleged secret dossier, if this is still in existence, while the numerous generals who have expressed their belief in the guilt of Dreyfus will now be called upon to explain the grounds of their convictions.

Although the liberation of Dreyfus has not been ordered, the court can order him brought to France at any moment, and will probably do so at an early stage of the inquiry. The court refrained from ordering his release Saturday because it would have been a presumption of his innocence.

Nowhere in Paris is there any sign of agitation; the city is quiet. The anti-Semite papers vainly endeavor, by abusing the judges of the court of cassation, to lash the public into a hostile demonstration, but the people seem rather inclined to resent the culpability or imbecility of the high officers of the general staff, who allowed themselves to become the prey of unscrupulous forgers. This refers especially to the officers deputed to investigate the Dreyfus affair.

It is believed even now that important facts are being concealed in order to shield the headquarters staff. Most of the Paris papers approve the decision of the court of cassation, although the Gaulois and the Eclair declare that even now revision is by no means certain. The Liberte bows to the decision, but does not think it will end the agitation. The Figaro announces that Comte Esterhazy has been deprived of his membership in the Legion of Honor.

The Dreyfus decision seems to have delayed a solution of the cabinet crisis. M. de Freycinet is again hesitating to accept the portfolio of minister of war, on the ground that, in view of the role the protestants have played in the Dreyfus case, it would be inadvisable for two protestants—himself and M. Ribot—to hold the portfolios of war and justice.

LONDON, Oct. 31.—A despatch to the Times from Paris shows that a curious dilemma has now developed in the Dreyfus affair, and says:

"If the secret dossier is now communicated to the court of cassation, it is conceivable that it may incriminate Dreyfus, but it will certainly convict General Mercier, minister of war at the time of the conviction of Dreyfus, of a criminal violation of the law in communicating to the court-martial documents that were communicated to Dreyfus and his counsel. It is said that it was in order to shield General Mercier, who acted thus owing to his weakness or his ignorance, that all subsequent ministers of war have adopted an obstinate attitude.

"If, on the other hand, there has never been a secret dossier, the whole case rests on the bordereau and must fall to the ground. How, then, since Lieutenant Colonel Henry's admission of forgery, could the generals still have declared Dreyfus guilty?

"The allegation that the dossier, if there be one, contains a letter from Emperor William to Colonel Schwarzkoppen (German military attache at Paris) is utterly improbable, in view of the emperor's character and habits. He could never have written to a military attache."

THE NEW SOUND-MONEY GOVERNOR FROM OREGON.

Joseph Simon, the new Republican Senator from Oregon, was born in Germany in 1851, and is a Jew, as his name suggests. He came with his parents to Oregon in 1857, and got his schooling first at a private school in Portland kept by Sylvester Pennoyer (who was afterwards governor), and later at the Portland public school. In 1870 he entered the law office of John H. Mitchell and Joseph N. Dolph, both of whom have since been United States Senators. Two years later he was admitted to the bar, and has practiced law ever since with ability and success. His political activities include five terms of service in the Oregon state senate, over two sessions of which he presided. In 1870 he ran for Mayor of Portland, and in 1891 for election by one vote. In 1891 he was a strong candidate for the United States circuit judgeship, to which President Harrison eventually appointed William B. Gilbert.

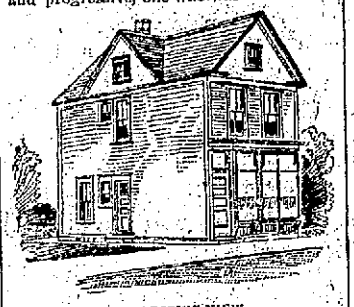

Senator Simon has long been active and influential Republican, and is at once and outspoken advocate of the gold standard. He has fought free silver from the beginning, and is credited with having done more than any one else to win Oregon's sound-money victories in 1896 and 1898.—[Harper's Weekly.

DESIGN FOR FRAME HOUSE.

[Copyrighted, 1898.]

The man who helps himself in the line of getting a home or a business place is always sure of having a helping hand extended toward him. The country storekeeper, the butcher, the barber, all should strive to make their surroundings congenial, so that their customers may appreciate and enjoy them.

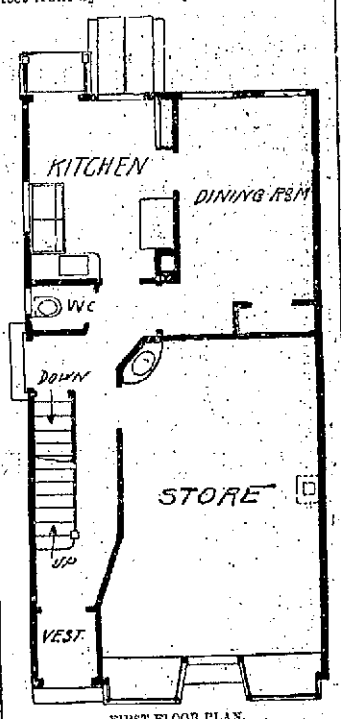

Well, in this case it was the barber that did it. He was a young man, of course, and progressive, one who was not bound to pile up a big bundle of rent receipts and thereby lay up for the landlord the riches that by right belonged to himself. Not much. Rebellion was in his make up, and nothing short of a full and free emancipation from slavery would do, so he has gone and done it, and the result is that another free and independent home is established, and the divine right is granted to one more household to rule its own domain, and the flag of universal freedom from landlordism once more waves. Long and often may it so wave!

This design shows a frame structure 18 feet front by 34 feet deep and two stories in height. There is a cellar under the whole building, 7 feet in the clear. The first story is 10 feet high and the second 9, all in the clear. The frame is sheathed, papered and clapboarded, and the roof is of cedar shingles and provides for one or two finished rooms in the attic. The first story contains a store 20 feet deep, and the living part of the house is so adjusted as to be entirely independent of the store. A kitchen and dining room are in rear of the store, enabling the proprietor to keep a close run of customers, even at mealtimes, and yet isolates the living quarters from the rest of the house.

The second story is well arranged for family uses. A full line of plumbing is introduced, and all street connections are made with water, sewer and gas pipes, and the building is well built and finished within a cost of $1,700. Now, this was done, and it is not a theoretical cost or estimate, but a real issue attained, a result, and a satisfactory one. This is what corners, and to those interested it may be relied on as a safe guide, under proper management, for them to go and do likewise.

FOXHALL KEENE'S NEW HOME.

Work on Foxhall Keene's new country home at Westbury, Long Island, among the Wheatley Hills, in the Meadowbrook hunting country, will be begun this week, and will be completed at the opening of the coming spring.

The plans of the architect, George A. Freeman, and his associate, Charles C. Thain, show a large, harmonious, strikingly plain house, of a severe Colonial style, spreading over a plot of ground measuring sixty by one hundred feet in size, on an extended terrace that covers a knoll, a quarter of a mile from the main road, is reached by a picturesque tree-lined lane, that ends at a flower-decked circle in front of the terrace, whose length of three hundred feet is bordered by a balustrade of turned balusters and flower capped posts. At one end of the terrace is a fountain, at the other a pavilion, from which an old fashioned garden, twenty feet below, can be viewed and reached by steps.

In the centre of the terrace stands the white house, finished in stucco, with a hipped roof, flat on top. The front presents a classic portico, with four large fluted columns under Corinthian caps, above which is a broad cornice with fluted pilasters. At each end is a piazza, reached from the first floor. A twenty-five-foot wide hall divides the house in the centre, and on either side of it are the library, drawing, dining and billiard rooms, with broad sliding doors between them.

On the second floor, reached by a grand stairway from the rear of the hall, are seven large bedrooms, each with its bath; while on the floor above are two bachelor bedrooms and the servants quarters. The kitchen is in the basement.

A quarter of a mile from the house is a stable for forty horses.

PROBABLE MOVEMENT OF TROOPS SOUTH.

Following the announcement that the movement of the troops from the various camps in the North to their Southern quarters for the winter would be delayed comes the statement of an official of the War Department that the real movement may not begin before November 10 if the plans of certain officers are carried out. The same official says, however, that there is reason to believe that the War Department will heed the many complaints that are already coming in from men who state that the troops in the Northern camps are already suffering from the cold, and that they are clamoring for warmer quarters. These complaints are not from the soldiers direct, but are from officers and visitors to the camps who have in the past few days been at the War Department on business connected with the movement of the regiments at Middletown, Pa. Recently, it was said, the temperature at Camp Meade early in the morning was below the freezing point, and this it is claimed, the men cannot stand, for though they have abundance of wood there is no chance of heating open tents longer than the fire is burning, and the men will be bound to suffer while asleep.

It is claimed that the Southern camps are already in shape for occupation by the soldiers, that there is a difference of between twenty and thirty degrees in the temperature, and that the altitude is so much lower that the men will at once, upon their arrival, be comfortable. With these facts before the department it is thought the movement will be hurried, notwithstanding the opposition of those who are attempting to have the troops remain in Pennsylvania as long as possible for what money can be made out of them.

None of these complaints, according to the official quoted, came from the First Rhode Island, whom he took occasion to praise for the manner in which they have conducted themselves throughout their life in the service, never complaining of the food or equipment, having avoided all notoriety, and having filed no complaints or requests for orders other than those it was the department's desire to have made. This official says that though he has no official advices as to the date for the movement of the First Rhode Island, he understood that it would, according to present plans, occur about November 12.

THE NICARAGUA CANAL AND THE WORLD'S MARKETS.

Europe, being situated on the western side of the great continent of Eurasia, has reached out for the trade of the countries east of her and for that of the growing states of North America.

The states occupying the eastern third of the United States find the natural market for their surplus raw materials in Europe, and are able to exchange a certain amount of manufactures there; but the natural markets for the products of American mills and factories are, first of all, those in the populous Orient, and, secondarily, those of South America and Africa. Our foreign commerce has not yet invaded these natural markets on a large scale, but the natural lines of the commerce of Europe and of the eastern United States are the same, and the competition between these industrial centres is direct and very strong. Under existing conditions Europe completes, under more favorable circumstances because she is able to reach the East by way of the Suez canal. Although the world's commerce tends primarily to follow the parallels of latitude, all the water-borne traffic between the North Atlantic and North Pacific countries has been, until recent years, diverted to the south by the intervening continents. The natural land barrier in each hemisphere was uninterrupted from the Arctic ocean to 35 degrees south latitude in the eastern hemisphere, and is still continuous to over 50 degrees south in the American hemisphere. A glance at the map, however, shows that in the vicinity of the Tropic of Cancer in each hemisphere the land barrier becomes very narrow. The oceans and the Caribbean and Mediterranean seas form an almost complete and nearly direct water girdle around the earth. Europe broke through the land barrier which diverted her commerce far out of its natural course when she opened the Suez canal in 1870. The isthmian barrier that nature imposed across the natural path of American commerce still exists, and until it is pierced the industries of the United States will be seriously handicapped in their competition with Europe. This competitive disadvantage is particularly felt by the manufacturing states of the northeastern section of the United States, because their geographical position and their industries are such that their competition with Europe is keener than that of any other part of our country.—[Emory R. Johnson, in American Review of Reviews.

The bacillus of whooping-cough, lately captured by Dr. Henry Koplik of New York, is extremely minute, the influenza germ being the only other bacillus so small. The whooping-cough bacillus usually resembles a club. After searching for it for five years, and finding it in the sputum of whooping-cough patients, the discoverer at last succeeded in making a culture of it by planting the sputum on human blood serum.

The apparel oft proclaims the man to be what he is not.—[Punch.

AN OPEN WEEK.

Only a Single Engagement Announced for the Opera House.

The only attraction at the Opera House this week is the Atkinson Comedy Company, which will appear this evening in "Peck's Bad Boy." This is one of the first of the farce comedies and has had a successful existence extending over a number of years. It has been somewhat re-written and made up-to-date, and will undoubtedly afford an amusing evening's entertainment.

Frank Daniels will present his two comic operas "The Idol's Eye" and "The Wizard of the Nile" at the Providence Opera House. Keith's will present a new vaudeville bill including Cora Tanner and Louis Mussen, in a one-act play, "Drifted Apart." George W. Wilson, the old Boston Museum favorite, will be seen in repertoire at Allen's Star Theatre. Al. Reeves's "Big Show" will be at the Olympic, and Harry Morris's "Little Lambs" Company at the Westminster.

Olga Nethersole's American tour will be opened in Cleveland November 2. She will be in Providence Christmas week.

Matilde Adams, in "The Little Minister," will be at the Providence Opera House Thanksgiving week.

Boston will have a second opportunity to see "Cyrano de Bergerac" in Mr. Daly's production at the Tremont Theatre this evening with Ada Rehan as Roxane and Charles Richman in the title role. "The White Heather" will have two more weeks at the Boston and there will be only three weeks more in which to see Minnie Addis in "The Little Minister" at the Hollis Street. "Jack and the Beanstalk" will be the attraction at the Museum; "The French Maid" at the Park, "The Patriot Card" at the Castle Square and "The Galley Slave" at the Bowdoin Square.

Mr. Hall Caine has sent out invitations to all the clergymen of Greater New York, Jersey City, Hoboken and Yonkers to witness a special performance of his play, "The Christian," at the Knickerbocker Theatre, at eleven o'clock on Thursday morning. Mr. Caine hopes that he will have a large audience, and from all the present indications his wishes will be fully realized. In addition to the performance of "The Christian," the novelist promises to deliver an address, in which he will tell his clerical guests what they ought to think about the play, and also, incidentally, what he thinks of the slums of New York, which he visited recently.

For the last four weeks of Mr. Sothern's stay at the Lyceum Theatre, New York, he will be seen in the role of Godfrey Ransen in a play by Mrs. Aubrey Sage Richardson and Miss Grace Livingston Furness, and which is now called "A Colonial Dame," though recently played on the road under the title "A Shilling's Worth." As the name suggests, the heroine, Mollie Hedden, plays a most important part in the drama, and this character will be acted by Miss Virginia Harned.

Henry Arthur Jones's "The Manoeuvres of Jane" was presented at the Haymarket Theatre, London, Saturday night, with Winifred Emery, Cyril Maude, Frederick Harrison and Gertrude Kingston in the cast.

Daniel Frohman has taken Sydney Rosenfeld's English version of "Un-Weissen Rorai," a successful German play. The English version has been named "At the White Horse Tavern."

Joseph Haworth will succeed D. T. Morgan as John Storm in "The Christian" November 22, when Mr. Morgan will leave Viola Allen's company for the Lyceum Theatre Stock Company.

"On and Off," Frohman's new farce will be produced in England in November. Maud Hobson, Lettice Fairfax, Seymour Hicks and Herbert Standing will be in the cast.

Sir Henry Irving's illness is more serious than at first reported. He has been confined to his bed at Glasgow for a fortnight.

The Hamburg-American liner Augusta Victoria arrived at New York Saturday morning, with most of the members of the Maurice Grau opera company on board. Among the notable singers were Mme. Emma Calve, Mrs. Emma Eames-Story, Edouard De Reszke, Frau Adams, Mme. Marcella Sembrich, Mr. David Bispham, Pol. Plancon, M. Salignac, Ernest Van Dyck and Mlle. Bauermeister, Jean De Reszke, Mme. Lilli Lehman and M. Victor Manuel will sail for this country on the Kaiser Wilhelm Der Grosse, which is due here November 14. The Maurice Grau opera company will open the season in Chicago November 7.

The Musical Age says: "Mrs. Celia A. Blackinton, the leading soprano of Providence, R. I., has recently resigned her position as soloist in Dr. Jules Jordan's choir, in the Central Congregational Church, for the purpose of special study under Mr. Sumner Salter. Mrs. Blackinton has a beautiful voice, of remarkable range, purity and flexibility, and her musical attainments as a singer combine to give her an unusually strong equipment for a vocal artist."

Effrangeon Davies, the English baritone, who has lately made such a success in the Worcester and Maine festivals, will return to Germany next week to prepare for his appearance in Bayreuth next summer. He will be heard again in America in the spring.

THE SOUTHERN WOMAN.

After the lapse of a quarter of a century, that gracious growth has reached an appreciable size and beauty; through the fearful ordeal of suffering unknown to the casual observer or reader, the Southern woman has emerged into the nobler conditions of her present existence. The softness and ease of her former life, its assured protection and the tender deference that surrounded it, were perhaps a trifle enervating to character; the affections flourished at the expense of the intellect; the delight of "being" was more present than the necessity of "doing;" the whole nature ran to vine, secure of always finding a strong support upon which to cling and beautify.

But with home and friends and wealth swept away by one tremendous cataclysm, the lovely, clinging creature was left either to trail helplessly upon the ground and perish there, or to develop new fibre, new roots, new powers of self-support; and the heroic treatment has borne its fruit, the terrible struggle has given birth to the child of promise; perhaps it is but a survival of the fittest; perhaps more have perished in the ordeal than we care to count; but it is past, and we look about us with pride at some of its obvious results. The fittest are indeed "very fit," as the Englishman has it.

Some of the most prominent women in literature—novelists, poets, journalists of every grade—as well as in the arts and on the stage, are Southern women; many of the accountants, amanuenses and other assistants in offices and counting-rooms are Southerners. Many of the women who enter into commerce, or who make homes for those happy inmates who find a place beneath their roofs and at their general boards, are Southerners. You find them in fact wherever you find women at work not too heavy for delicately framed and tenderly bred women; they cannot become scrubbers or daughters of the plow, although I have known some who understood the finer parts of laundry work, such as the getting up of laces and lawns—very, and did it beautifully, too—as well as or better than their gloves used to do it for them. But these were exceptions to the rule; for in a general way the Southern woman cannot use her hands to any great effect, except in holding a pen or pencil, or a needle, or using her voice on the operatic or dramatic stage, and her taste and refinement are among the best items of her stock in trade. It is the old story of the Arab steed of pure blood but light frame who outstayed the big-boned Norman war-horse, the scimiter which cleaves its way where the battle-axe fails—the perfumed oil which gently creeps through, while vinegar and caustics do not penetrate.—[Mrs. Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly.

EVENING GOWN OF CHIFFON.

Chiffon in the world of fashion is a mainstay for evening gowns. The most delicate creations are developed in this most exquisite fabric, and ball and dinner gowns of it are elaborately trimmed with lace.

The model shown is a combination of white chiffon over yellow silk, with pinings and ruchings of yellow chiffon for trimming. The skirt has a circular flounce cut in one with a front gore. The yoke to which this is joined is scalloped, and a velvet ribbon shirred over a cord covers the edges. Back of this a ruche of yellow chiffon follows the same line. The foot of the ruffle is similarly trimmed, above two plaitings of yellow chiffon.

The waist opens over a guimpe and vest of yellow chiffon, and the sleeves are made in a unique way, with a deep sort of mitten and a little cap at the top, both overlapping a plaiting of yellow chiffon. A little frill of Point d'Angleterre trims the front of the waist.

The lines of trimming on the skirt and waist in the gown meet at the waist-line, giving a novel effect, a style much in vogue.

Some of the most elegant robes of lace are made up over chiffon instead of silk. The all-over nets and chiffons embroidered in chenille, ribbon, spangles and jewels, or a combination of these, are delicate beyond description, both in coloring and design, and they will be used to complete dresses as well as theatre waists.

LINCOLN AND MCKINLEY.

I stood a few days ago on the portico of the executive mansion. I recalled that in my youth I there met President Lincoln as he came out of the White House door. We were alone. Had I then lost, as I have since lost, the awe which a young man feels on meeting a great one, I should have presumed to speak to him; and, perhaps, one of the saddest faces on which I ever looked might have been touched, in the passing greeting, with that kindly smile and lighting of the eyes which sometimes transformed it into beauty.

The burden of the great war was then upon his gaunt frame. He had emancipated the slave, but the war was not over. The freedom of a race, the issue of equal rights for all men, high or low, black or white, was still trembling in the balance.

A few days ago I stood with President McKinley on the same portico. We were not alone. Every foot of space, the railings, the grounds, were filled with a crowd of eager, interested people, men and women and children, waiting the march of the 10th regular cavalry, colored troops, who soon came passing in review. They were dismounted and marching in column. They were the heroes of the recent war. They had saved the brave Roosevelt and his Rough Riders. They had stormed and swept the hill of San Juan. They had ranked themselves with the bravest of the brave.

Their uniforms showed service, but it was the uniform of the United States soldier. They swept by with easy, swinging step. With heads erect and flashing eyes and kindling faces, bearing in their dusky hands the torn colors of their regiment, they passed in review, and the President of the United States bared his head in token of respect.

There and then I saw the consummation of Lincoln's work. Mayhap he, too, looked down from the portico of a mansion eternal in the heavens. The issue which trembled in his great hand is settled; the slave is free; there are equal rights for all; the servile distinction of color is gone. There are so many good fellows, and the black man is the American soldier and the American citizen. There is no avenue of business life in which he does not walk; no profession of which he is not a member; no school of learning or of athletics in which he does not rank; and, on the platform, one of his race is today the best orator in America.—[Secretary Long.

A TALENT FOR BALANCING.

The pleasant coffee room of the old Star and Garter, at Richmond, which was burned down in 1869 was patronized by statesmen, politicians and writers. On Saturday evening, it was regularly visited by a middle-aged gentleman of rather broad stature, with gray hair, and a large shirt collar which formed a conspicuous feature in his attire. He would dine always alone at a particular corner table, and after dinner it was his humor to build up before him a pyramid of tumblers and wine glasses, which he topped with a decanter. Occasionally the whole structure would topple over, and litter the table with its ruins. Then the middle-aged gentleman would rise, pay his bill, including the charge for broken glass, and depart. The waiters knew him well. He was Thomas Babington, Lord Macaulay!—[Cornhill Magazine.

HALLOWE'EN.

Weird hour so big with fate,
Lying two hours between,
The air is thick with thrills and ghosts
At Hallowe'en!

Not only of the past
Dear phantoms may be seen,
Of future loves for maids and men
At Hallowe'en!

O, shivery, shaky hour,
Betwixt to be and been!
Old phantoms lose their power
O'er trembling seventeen!
For love's ghosts
Alone hold sway,
Hope ever driveth fear away
At Hallowe'en!

THE CRICKET'S SONG.

"Creak! creak! creak!" The year is growing old!
The warlit voice of the cricket sounds
Like a prophecy oft told.
It pipes from the bristling stubble fields,
Where the waving grain late stood,
From the leaf-strewn bank of the silent stream,
From the depths of the tangled wood,
From the wreck of the blighted garden beds,
From the roadside wild and bare,
From some crevice warm 'neath the old hearthstone,
From lone nooks everywhere!

"Creak! creak! creak!" The year is growing old!
The sumach's banners are all aflame,
The maple's crimson and gold,
While tints more fair than Tyrian dyes
O'er the landscape wide are spread!
Brown and scarlet, russet and bronze,
Of every hue and shade;
And the sun as it to excel them all
As he sinks to his royal rest,
With gorgeous drapery decks profuse
The chambers of the west.

"Creak! creak! creak!" The year is growing old!
The mountain's brow is wrinkled and hare,
The night winds sigh in the wold,
The daisy has lost her dainty frill,
The aster is pale and wan,
The blue-fringed gentian haunts lonely glens,
The eyebright the wandering stream,
The goldenrod's gold is turned to rust,
The alders with corals are dressed,
The thistledown floats in the chill autumn air
Like a spirit in pain seeking rest.

"Creak! creak! creak!" The year is growing old!
The dry leaves rustle at every gust
And soon will lie drunk in the mold;
The ripe nuts fall from the swaying branch,
The birds to the southward have flown,
The crow from the dead pine's topmost bough
Calls loud in his monotone,
The spider is busy weaving a veil
Of patterns of choicest lace
Finer than antique art e'er knew,
To cover the dead year's face!

—[Mrs. A. Giddings Park.

FANCIES.

"Isn't she one of those strong-minded women?"

"Yes; that is her principal weakness."—[Puck.

"It seems to me," said the bachelor, "that I would let the child's inclinations determine what he should eat. Let nature guide him."

"Humph!" said the child's father; "if we did that, his bill-of-fare would include matches and shoe-blacking."—[Puck.

Professor Thinkifout was about to be married, and had just received an invitation to his own wedding, which he had absent-mindedly mailed to himself.

"Well, well," he mused, "what does this mean? My fiancee's name on a wedding invitation! The faithless hussy! And great Logarithms!! There's my name on it, too. Either she's untrue, or I'm about to be a bigamist."—[Truth.

Mr. Mulehlest—Yes, doctor, I have a frightful cold. But what did you say was your special method of treatment?

Physician—We strike at the cause or origin of the trouble.

Mr. Mulehlest—That's odd. Anyhow, you'll find the baby in the other room.—[Brooklyn Life.

WINTER GOWNS.

There never has been a season when so many different styles were in fashion, particularly for cloth gowns. It would seem almost impossible for a woman to be unfashionably dressed, provided the sleeves of her gown are small, and the skirt has not particular fulness except at the back. Velvet and cloth are combined in many of the new gowns with very satisfactory results. A favorite combination of color is the light wood-color with dark brown, and a very charming gown of wood-colored cloth, the cloth with a satin finish, is odd in design, and is trimmed with a deep brown velvet. The cloth is in an overskirt or polonaise, while the under part of the skirt and the upper part of the waist and sleeves are of velvet. There are four rows of narrow velvet ribbon outlining the cloth. There is apparently no way of getting either in or out of this costume, but the gown is fastened at the left side with invisible hooks and eyes. The sleeves are small, with a cuff of velvet at the wrist, and are cut so as to give the effect of a very long shoulder-seam.

A smart cloth gown that is simple in design is made of blue Venetian cloth. The skirt is cut with a circular flounce effect, fitting very closely over the hips. The flounce is not scant, as is generally the case, but, on the contrary, is exaggeratedly full. It is made in clusters of plaits at equal distances apart, and the plaits are fastened only a short distance, leaving the flounce to flare out about the foot. The waist has three rows of tucks put on to give the effect of plaits below a plain, square yoke of the deepest blue velvet, that is finished with a stock-collar and side tabs. The sleeves are very nearly tight-fitting, but have some fulness at the top, with rows of tucks across the fulness. There is no finish at the wrists and the sleeve is very long. The belt is of fancy metal.—[Harper's Bazar.

DINNER FOR A STORY.

Here is a story told of Robert Burns in his youth. Burns was living in the town of Ayr, and, though still young, had attained more than a local reputation as a poet. One day he was passing through the main street of the town and saw two strangers sitting in one of the inn windows. With idle curiosity he stopped to look at them. Seeing him, and thinking that the rustic guest might afford them some amusement while waiting, the stranger called him in and asked him to dine with them. Burns readily accepted the invitation, and proved a merry, entertaining guest.

When dinner was nearly finished the strangers suggested that each should try his hand at versemaking, and that the one who failed to write a rhyme should pay for the dinner. They felt secure in the challenge, believing that their rustic guest would pay for the meal. The rymes were written, and Burns read the following:

"I, Johnny Peep,
Saw two sheep:
Two she-p saw me,
Quit a crown apiece
Will pay for their fleece,
And, I, Johnny-Peep, go free."

The strangers' astonishment was great, and they both exclaimed: "Who are you? You must be Bobbie Burns?"—[Syracuse Standard.

ANTS FOR SKELETONIZING.

It is generally known that any small dead mammal or bird, when left near an ant-hill, will ultimately be found picked clean of flesh. The ants are clever, and do their work quickly. It has been lately demonstrated that they can be made useful in the direction of skeletonizing specimens. Professor Bernard has been employing ants as his servants. While in Florida he had a fox-squirrel thus skeletonized in a single day. The only agents employed were ants. His method of procedure is to kill his specimen, binds it with wire in the position in which he wishes the skeleton to remain, and then place it near a group of ant-hills. The voracious ants do the rest.

The operation requires careful watching, lest the entomological dissectors should not be content with simply devouring the flesh, but should attack the cartilage that holds the bones together. At precisely the right moment the professor removes the specimen from the neighborhood of the ant-hills, and applies a preservative and hardening chemical to the cartilage.—[Popular Science News.

AWFUL SKIN HUMOR

My little daughter's head and face broke out in bleeding sores. One of her ears was so affected we thought it would slough off. Her suffering was intense, getting no rest unless under opiates. The physician tried every known remedy, but instead of getting better, she got worse. Distracted with her condition, I was advised to try CUTICURA REMEDIES. Before the first week I noticed that the little sufferer was beginning to get relief, and in less than two months was entirely cured.

STOCKINGS
NEWPORT ONE PRICE CLOTHING CO.

There are four rows of narrow velvet ribbon outlining the cloth. There is apparently no way of getting either in or out of this costume, but the gown is fastened at the left side with invisible hooks and eyes. The sleeves are small, with a cuff of velvet at the wrist, and are cut so as to give the effect of a very long shoulder-seam.

A smart cloth gown that is simple in design is made of blue Venetian cloth. The skirt is cut with a circular flounce effect, fitting very closely over the hips. The flounce is not scant, as is generally the case, but, on the contrary, is exaggeratedly full. It is made in clusters of plaits at equal distances apart, and the plaits are fastened only a short distance, leaving the flounce to flare out about the foot. The waist has three rows of tucks put on to give the effect of plaits below a plain, square yoke of the deepest blue velvet, that is finished with a stock-collar and side tabs. The sleeves are very nearly tight-fitting, but have some fulness at the top, with rows of tucks across the fulness. There is no finish at the wrists and the sleeve is very long. The belt is of fancy metal.—[Harper's Bazar.

DINNER FOR A STORY.

Here is a story told of Robert Burns in his youth. Burns was living in the town of Ayr, and, though still young, had attained more than a local reputation as a poet. One day he was passing through the main street of the town and saw two strangers sitting in one of the inn windows. With idle curiosity he stopped to look at them. Seeing him, and thinking that the rustic guest might afford them some amusement while waiting, the stranger called him in and asked him to dine with them. Burns readily accepted the invitation, and proved a merry, entertaining guest.

When dinner was nearly finished the strangers suggested that each should try his hand at versemaking, and that the one who failed to write a rhyme should pay for the dinner. They felt secure in the challenge, believing that their rustic guest would pay for the meal. The rymes were written, and Burns read the following:

"I, Johnny Peep,
Saw two sheep:
Two she-p saw me,
Quit a crown apiece
Will pay for their fleece,
And, I, Johnny-Peep, go free."

The strangers' astonishment was great, and they both exclaimed: "Who are you? You must be Bobbie Burns?"—[Syracuse Standard.

ANTS FOR SKELETONIZING.

It is generally known that any small dead mammal or bird, when left near an ant-hill, will ultimately be found picked clean of flesh. The ants are clever, and do their work quickly. It has been lately demonstrated that they can be made useful in the direction of skeletonizing specimens. Professor Bernard has been employing ants as his servants. While in Florida he had a fox-squirrel thus skeletonized in a single day. The only agents employed were ants. His method of procedure is to kill his specimen, binds it with wire in the position in which he wishes the skeleton to remain, and then place it near a group of ant-hills. The voracious ants do the rest.

The operation requires careful watching, lest the entomological dissectors should not be content with simply devouring the flesh, but should attack the cartilage that holds the bones together. At precisely the right moment the professor removes the specimen from the neighborhood of the ant-hills, and applies a preservative and hardening chemical to the cartilage.—[Popular Science News.

MUNICIPAL OUTRAGES.

There is more or less excitement among sober-minded people in the city of New York over the revival of Tammany methods, by which vice is not only tolerated but practically authorized in the interest of the party. A mass meeting was held recently to consider this question, which was attended by three thousand people, who listened to an address from ex-Police Commissioner Morse, who is in a position to be able to make startling developments. He was in office under Mayor Strong, and against him no whisper of incapacity or want of integrity was ever heard.

In reply to the statement that has been given out, that gambling and open saloons and places of vice generally had not increased during the administration of Mayor Van Wyck, ex-Commissioner Morse told what he had seen with his own eyes during a short trip taken on the previous evening. He declared, and furnished proof therefor, that on this occasion the pool rooms and gambling houses that were formerly closed were not only open, but that their number had been greatly increased. He also declared that these doors were "open" according to contract; that the managers had permission from the Tammany authorities to run them for a consideration—in short, that a trust had been created in behalf of law-breaking establishments, and only those persons who would pay the fees were entitled to engage in this nefarious business. In other words, a license is granted to break law, rather than to proceed according to law, and it was asserted that one precinct alone contributes $10,000 a month to the Tammany leaders for election and other purposes.

And this condition of things exists throughout the city. This being true, it is no wonder that Tammany hopes to carry the election, for the money thus gathered in is not all expended in the city itself. Mr. Morse in the course of his address presented written statements, accompanied with affidavits, from Rabbi Silverman, Rev. B. Frank Saxon, Rev. S. Parkes Cadman, Rev. S. J. Belcher, Rev. S. C. Hearn, Rev. F. C. Harding and a number of women who are prominent in missionary work on the East side, all testifying to the facts as presented. It is no wonder that the three thousand men burst out in cries of "Shame! Shame!" and went to their homes humiliated over existing conditions.

Now if it were true that these things could not be prevented under the laws, the case would be quite different. The demonstration to the contrary is before us in the fact that under Mayor Strong such things were not permitted, and though the law was not fully enforced, none of these establishments were able to continue their operations in the open. It is always safe to conclude that what has been done in so recent times can be done again.

The case of the gambling slot machines in Newport, if reports are true, is precisely the counterpart of conditions in New York. They were put out of the saloons under one police administration, and kept out, and restored by another. The story goes that there was a consideration, though it might be office holding rather than cold cash. In either case the situation is equally bad.

THE REPUBLICAN NOMINEE.

The adjourned Republican city convention Saturday evening decided to present the name of A. Livingston Mason as its candidate for the mayoralty of Newport. Mr. Mason may not be known as intimately to some of the citizens and voters as could be desired, but he is by no means a stranger in our city, or to its wants. He spent many summers here before becoming a permanent resident, and was engaged in business which brought him into close contact with our people. Connected as he was with the old Continental Steamboat Company, he has been practically a Newport business man for a long period, as well as a resident at Halidon hill. His father before him, Hon. Earl P. Mason, one of the most successful business men in Providence, owned and occupied for a long time a summer home on Bellevue avenue, and was an ardent lover of our city.

We have been reading of the good work going on from this city in behalf of the sick soldiers at Camp Wikoff, and it will be borne in mind that Mr. and Mrs. A. Livingston Mason led in all the expeditions to Montauk Point for the purpose of bringing sufferers to this city and finding places for them in the hospital, and even in their own home. No purer patriotism has been shown and no better service done during the war, and no town has been more highly honored for such work than has Newport.

Such facts as these will quickly dispose of the criticism that Mr. Mason is too much of a stranger to be identified with our city, or to comprehend its wants. He is in every way fitted for the position for which he is now named, having had large business experience, and representing the principles which make for good municipal government.

THE DREYFUS CASE.

The court of cassation having decided to grant a revision of the Dreyfus case, there is now at least a probability that justice may be done. It is quite certain that in the former trial all the principles of law and equity were violated in a most extraordinary manner. The case need not be outlined anew, as it is pretty well understood, not only in France, but throughout the world.

It is remarkable that such persistent opposition to granting a re-opening should have manifested itself even in Paris. Now that it is known that the principal witnesses were forgers and perjurers, and had made up a case to suit themselves, it would seem that there should have been no hesitation in granting a petition for a re-hearing. But there has been a most determined effort to prevent a reconsideration, with threatened revolutions as a result, if it were granted. This goes to prove that prejudice rather than justice has been the underlying cause, and that the honor of the army rather than that honor which comes from doing right has been the inspiring influence that was sought to be obtained.

The court of cassation has done itself credit by this latest decision. Of course the innocence of Dreyfus is not established thereby, but the opportunity is given to present the situation in its true light, and thus open a way for the vindication of the victim, providing the testimony justifies such a verdict. A second trial may possibly confirm the judgment of the court-martial, but the triumph of justice is found in the granting of a revision. This is the great step, and all that the friends of Dreyfus, and believers in his innocence, have asked or can ask at the present moment. The whole civilized world will watch the further proceedings with increasing interest from day to day, as it is not now possible to obscure the situation so that the facts shall not be known.

There is a possibility that colleges as well as other institutions may have so much money as to depend upon their wealth for success rather than upon their work. If any institution in the country is in danger from that source it is Chicago University. Mr. Rockefeller's recent offer of $2,000,000 on condition that as much more shall be raised by others before January 1, 1900, is likely to be accepted on the conditions imposed. President Harper says that $1,500,000 of the required amount has already been pledged, and he is confident that the remainder will be forthcoming on time.

It is announced by the friends of Governor Tanner of Illinois that the labor vote of Chicago will go solidly over to his support, in view of the action at Virginia by which negro workers have been excluded from the state. The estimate says that not less than 40,000 votes will be added to the Republican column as a result of this action. Formerly the Republicans declaimed against Altgeld as the chief anarchist of the country; but now the tables are turned, and there is no doubt about Tanner as standing for the worst forms of anarchy which have ever appeared in America.

The politicians are busily interested just now in figuring out in advance the results of the coming elections. The New York papers, especially, are making up statements of probabilities and publishing them, to the great delight of their readers who are in political accord with the census takers. Of course both sides claim the majority, and with about equal assurance and equal probability. It must be confessed, however, that the situation appears to favor Democratic success in several of the states where the controversy is now at its height.

Bishop Whitaker of the Protestant Episcopal Church publishes a letter over his own signature, advising Pennsylvania citizens who "love righteousness more than a temporary success of the party" to vote for Rev. Dr. Swallow, the eighth commandment candidate. This is an unusual course for prelates of that church to take, but the occasion justifies all that he has to say in his somewhat remarkable letter.

Geologists have now figured out that the deposits from the river Po will in the course of time make Venice an inland city, with solid streets instead of canals. Persons contemplating visits there need not be disturbed, however, for they will yet have an opportunity to traverse the waterways in gondolas as of yore; for one of the lowest estimates is that it will be from 100 to 120 centuries before the North Adriatic becomes dry land.

The intensity of politics in the Empire state is in a measure shown by the fact that Colonel Roosevelt traveled 2,500 miles last week, and made 100 campaign speeches. Candidate Van Wyck talks less, but it is quite possible that he is making more capital by his silence than he would by his speeches.

THE ART OF BOOK COLLECTING.

Book collectors are all pretty much of the same type. For many years Macaulay hunted high and low for a little volume which was known to contain information on a minor problem of historic interest. He had all but given up the quest as a very bad job, but one day, according to this week's Literature, he happened to mention the name of the book to a then well-known old bookseller, who shook his head, and said that he had never heard of the book, and should it be found, the inquirer would certainly have to pay a stiff price. Now, outside this old man's shop there was a box of whilt, may be described as "malcontents"—odd volumes and despised books generally, offered at a uniform price of about sixpence each. Macaulay turned over a few volumes, and, to his unspeakable joy, discovered the very book which he had so long sought in vain. He rescued it, and, after paying for it, allowed the old bibliopole to see it. What the vendor's thoughts were there is, as the coroner's jury would say, "nothing to show." Neither is there anything to prove that Macaulay paid more than the stipulated price. Indeed, the art of book collecting may be said to resolve itself into a matter of knowing what you want, and buying it "on the nail" when the opportunity occurs. A book collector once saw on a miscellaneous stall in Leather lane a volume of seventeenth-century plays priced at sixpence. Being uncertain in his dates, and not wishing to risk so large a sum on uncertainty, he rushed off to the British museum and discovered that the plays were of the right edition and very rare. Returning to purchase, he discovered that in the short interval another man had come along and carried the volume off!

"JOHN SPLENDID."

The fate of a story is in no way determined by its serial publication. The fact that an important piece of work may appear in this way for months, running its course quietly and then falling suddenly like a cataract among the critics when published in book form, is again instanced in the case of "John Splendid," by Neil Munro. This book, which has been appearing during the year in Blackwood's and in the Bookman, was published in its complete form last month, and has been taken up with immense vigor and excitement by all the important reviewers, from Andrew Lang downward, in the English press. "John Splendid" is already an assured success in England, and it remains to be seen whether Mr. Munro's American cousins will receive his work with the same enthusiasm. It should be said, by way of explanation, that Scotland has two peoples—those of the hills and those of the lowlands; each is as different as possible. Mr. Munro is one of the few Scotish authors now writing who knows anything about the Highlander, and it is with the Highlander that John Splendid is concerned, so let nobody tremble with fear at being coerced into reading the work of another Kailyarder.—The Bookman.

CIVIL WAR MEMORIES.

Civil war reminiscences are in order just now. Always of interest to those most concerned, they have now an attraction to everyone. In every company of women containing one or more belonging to the last generation you will hear references to what was said or done during the "other war," as it is commonly called.

"I don't remember much about it in general," said a middle-aged matron at one such gathering the other day, "for I was a very little girl. But I can readily recall this much in particular: My father was the most loyal of men and my mother was dreadfully afraid that he would enlist. He had promised her many times not to do so, but as the strife waxed and showed no sign of waning she feared lest his patriotism would get the better of his promise. She accordingly pressed me into service, and I was instructed never to let him leave the house without following close after, tight hold of his coat tails. If he were to enter a recruiting office I was to hold on tighter than ever and cry just as hard as ever I could. I followed her instructions to the letter, and whether it did any good or not, I don't know, but my father didn't enlist, and, at any rate, that was the part I played in the civil war."

"My experience was somewhat different from that," said another woman. "I was a gay young girl at the time the war broke out, and, although we all realized that it was a serious thing, yet our light-hearted youth generally contrives to get some frolic out of the most sober situations. When the news came of the firing on Fort Sumter I was staying with friends in the country, and, horrified as we were, the first thing we did was to rush up to the garret and bring forth an old musket that had seen service in the war of the revolution. 'Now, girls,' said the son of the family, 'you must learn to fire it off. There's no knowing what may happen these days.' So out on the lawn we went and spent the whole day, the entire lot of us, in shooting at a target with the rusty old musket. When the soldiers went to camp near my home it was the signal for all sorts of festivities. The camp was the old agricultural fair grounds, where we were in the habit of going every fall and having a good time, and it seemed but natural that we should go there for good times at any other season. It accordingly became the Mecca of all our walks and drives; strangers sojourning in the neighborhood were taken straight out to see it, and we were always visiting it with flowers and fruit and whatever other offerings might be acceptable to our beloved soldiers, many of whom were personal friends."

"The sanitary fairs toward the close of the war were what I remember as of particular interest," said a third woman. "The great and practical good that these organizations accomplished is well known through history, while the new woman is not likely to let us forget the fact that they constituted our government's first public recognition of women; but no one has ever adequately set forth the social delights of the sanitary fair. It was not that we had lacked all other gayety, like the Southerners, we had had our starvation parties and similar divertisons, but these fairs were a glorious combination of patriotism with pleasure, and we made the most of them. As usual, the outward and visible sign of the organization found expression in our dress. Sanitary patches, consisting of a tiny square of hemstitched cambric, lace-edged and with a flag or bow of tri-color in one corner, were worn on top of the head, the hair being dressed low over the ears and with a big chignon at the nape of the neck. These patches were very becoming—so much so that it became the fashion for every one to wear them and for all the time, though, of course, they were first donned only by those actively engaged in the sanitary fair work."—Philadelphia Times.

The construction of a pneumatic tube line from London to Bombay, a distance of 4,400 miles, is the striking engineering scheme brought forward in India, with the prediction that sooner or later the line will be an accomplished fact. When completed, mails will be transported between the two cities in twenty-four hours. The height of some mountains to be crossed in Asia Minor, and the maintaining of power houses in remote places, are the chief difficulties foreseen.

Headache and Backache, No Appetite, Great Distress

Hood's Sarsaparilla Made Her Happy, Well and Strong.

"I have been entirely cured of catarrh by Hood's Sarsaparilla. I could not sleep nights, but would sit up in bed and cough and spit. I had headache, backache and sideache all the time. I had no appetite and whatever I did eat distressed me. I was weak and all worn out. It was my mother's advice that led me to take Hood's Sarsaparilla. I am now entirely cured and I hope all who are troubled with catarrh or any blood disease will take Hood's Sarsaparilla for it gave me new life and made me happy, well and strong." MRS. SAMUEL H. BOSTON AND VICINITY.

BOSTON, Oct. 31, 8 A. M.—For Boston and vicinity—Fair tonight and Tuesday; cooler tonight, followed by slowly rising temperature during Tuesday; westerly winds.

WEATHER CONDITIONS.

The weather is generally fair in the United States, but cloudiness is reported at 8 a. m. from New England westward over the northern tier of states to the Rockies. Cloudiness also extends south to the Ohio valley. Three stations, widely apart, report local rain or snow as falling at the observation hour. The barometer is low in Alberta province, the depression reaching southward into the Dakotas. This is the only indication of storm development at present. The temperature ranges between 25 and 50 degrees over the greater portion of the country. A line of 40-degree temperature runs south nearly to the Gulf of Mexico coast, and at New Orleans and Galveston the thermometer registers 48. Freezing weather prevails in Montana and the Western states. The precipitation in New England yesterday was light at all points.

MUNICIPAL EVILS.

Rev. Mr. Allen on "Modern Cities and How They Serve Us"

In the evening at the First Methodist Episcopal Church the pastor, Rev. J. H. Allen, had for his subject "Modern Cities and How they Serve us." After speaking of the various forms of good and evil in cities Mr. Allen said in part: "Another reason why these evils are not checked is an inefficient and too often corrupt city government. We ought to have the best governed cities here in America because we lay more out in expenditures. If these extra burdens are upon us because we have undertaken important improvements, the responsibilities require the most skilful and honest management; but if we are bearing these burdens because the people's money has been squandered, then we ought to demand the best leadership in the municipal government that the city affords.

"Here in Newport things may not be as bad as they are in some places, but we should be glad to hope that they are not worse in any other place in Christendom. To all appearance, there is traffic on the Lord's day demoralizing in its effects on reverence and worship. Men go in and out of liquor saloons at the back door on Sunday, leaving an impression on the one hand that law is to be violated in an underhanded manner and on the other that they expect to have a dram like a sneaking way on Sunday. The slot machine in liquor saloons is evidence that intemperance and gambling are so near twin sisters that one is not usually contented out of sight of the other. This double menace under one roof to the children, the moral character and useful life of our young men makes little impression where it ought to make a large one on the officers of the law.

"It is affirmed by the friends of the chief executive of the city that he cannot afford strictly to enforce all the old Puritan blue laws. That is why he receives the support of so many. Is it an old Puritan blue law that fixes a penalty against houses of ill fame, the selling of liquor to minors, and using slot machines for gambling? If it is because these laws are not enforced that he receives the support of so many, we may inquire whether the many are in favor of a Christian civilization in the city. It is only a few years since a commission in this state was appointed to consider the obsolete laws on the statute book, that useless laws might be repealed and good ones be brought forward and enforced; hence all statutes today in the state have at least the indirect sanction of the legislators of the last decade of the nineteenth century. If legislators have done something to clear the way for the execution of law, officers ought to catch the word for a forward movement, and the people give a most vigorous support. Instead of this some are too willing to have a city government that will be easy with roguies, which means that the pallium of law shall draggle in the dust and the worst elements take courage in their wickedness.

Others become indifferent and wish to have nothing to do with politics because it is associated with so much corruption. Inasmuch as all sorts of corruption are in our midst, we might as well approach the evil and fight it in politics as in other places, for if we let it alone the effects of it will light us at our very doors, robbing us of some of the most cherished civic blessings which we enjoy. If we defeat the worst we may not gain absolutely the best; but when we shall elect officers that may not be the best in all respects, but far superior to those who make it easy for rascals and other law breakers, we shall be making headway toward the ideal in view. It is time for all good men to unite in the city for an honest and impartial government, for reforms in society and encouragements for good citizenship."

A couple of drovers from Newport this morning, looking for cattle, bought a small drove from the wife of the supposed owner, and after considerable trouble got the cattle from the fields to the ferry, being about to ship them to Newport when informed that the property was mortgaged. With considerable chagrin the drovers turned the stock round, and when last seen were making as much haste as possible to get the animals back into the pasture from which they had been taken. It is understood that the would-be purchasers had made a partial payment before taking the stock.

THE MAINE AT HAVANA

Captain Sigsbee Tells of Her Reception in the Harbor.

"In command of the Maine at Havana, I had but one wish, which was to be friendly to the Spanish authorities, as required by my orders. I took pleasure in carrying out my orders in this respect. The first Spanish officer to come on board was a naval lieutenant, who represented the captain of the port. His bearing was both dignified and polite (which, by the way, is invariably the rule with Spanish officers), but I thought he looked embarrassed, and even humiliated in carrying out his duty. I greatly regretted that such should be the case, and did all that I could to make him feel at ease. After the arrival of a second Spanish lieutenant, who seemed to take matters more philosophically, and of a German lieutenant, the naval officer who had arrived first appeared to lose his embarrassment. I made all the visits required of me by usage, and was everywhere received with courtesy. It is hardly to the point whether there was any great amount of friendliness for us beneath the surface. The Spanish officials on every hand gave us absolutely all the courtesy to which we were entitled by usage, and they gave it with all the grace of manner which is characteristic of their nation. I accepted it as genuine.

It is not essential to enter here into the details of usage in connection with salutes. It is enough to say that convention required the Maine to salute the Spanish national flag and also to salute Admiral Manterola. But such salutes are given only when it is known that they will be returned. I therefore deemed it prudent to determine this point, although the visit of a Spanish officer to the ship would ordinarily be thought sufficiently convincing. In the course of conversation with the Spanish naval officer who was the first to visit the Maine, I said: "I am about to give myself the honor of saluting your national flag; from which battery will the salute be returned?" He replied: "From the Cabaña." With that assurance both salutes were fired and returned. The salute to the Spanish admiral was returned by his flagship, the Alfonso XII. Shortly after the arrival of the Maine, I sent my aid, Naval Cadet J. H. Holden, ashore to report to General Lee and announce that I would soon follow. I promptly gave orders that no officers or men of the vessel should go ashore, unless by my express order. I desired first to test the public feeling, private and official, with reference to the Maine's visit. I made my visit to Admiral Manterola in full dress, with cocked hat, epaulets, etc. I landed at the Machina, the man-of-war landing, which is virtually at the Spanish admiral's residence. There was a crowd assembled, but only of moderate size. There was no demonstration of any kind; the crowd closed in about me slightly. I thought the people stolid and sullen; so far as I could gather from an occasional glance, but I took very little notice of anybody. On my return, however, I noted carefully the bearing of the various groups of Spanish soldiers that I passed. They saluted me, as a rule, but with so much expression of apathy that the salute really went for nothing. They made no demonstration against me, however—not even by look.

The same day I made my visit to General Lee, and arranged with him for my visit to the acting captain and governor-general, who at that time was General Parrado, Captain-General Blanco being absent on a tour of the island. It is customary in the case of high officials to make the visit at an appointed time. When I made my visit, January 27, accompanied by General Lee, there seemed at first to be a probability of embarrassment. We called at the palace of General Blanco at the appointed time, and apparently nobody at the palace knew anything about our appointment. The ver-present American newspaper man relieved the situation; he ascertained that General Parrado was in a residence across the way, where he was expecting us. We promptly repaired the mistake, and were received by General Parrado with great courtesy. He had a table prepared with refreshments for our benefit. All of my official visits were returned promptly. General Parrado returned my visit in person, and was given the salute of a captain and governor-general; that is to say, of the governor of a colony—seventeen guns, the same salute which is prescribed for the governor of one of the United States.

All visits were made without friction and with courtesy on both sides, and apparently with all the freedom of conversation and action usually observed.—[Captain Charles D. Sigsbee, in the Century.

BISMARCK'S INTEREST IN NATURE.

Bismarck's keen interest in everything appertaining to nature is well known. Particularly during the latter years of his life, his sympathy seemed to grow in proportion as leisure afforded him increased opportunities for looking after his estates and observing the thousand and one phenomena associated with life in the country. He was particularly fond of strolling in the grounds of Friedrichsruhe before luncheon, or in the afternoon before dinner. If a visitor whose companionship was congenial to him, happened to be staying in the house, Bismarck would send his manservant Pinnow up to his room to inquire whether he would like to accompany his highness for a walk. On such an occasion a friend relates the following anecdote, which has not hitherto been published:

"You know how fond he was of watching the deer, the water-fowl, the flight of birds. It was a habit of his at certain hours of the day—by preference towards sunset—to stroll into the grounds and sit upon the rough wooden bench in the corner of the field in which, on the occasion of his eightieth birthday, the emperor had gathered together quite a military force to do honor to him. Opposite this bench you may have noticed a number of old dead trees. They are a favorite resort of starlings, and Bismarck used to sit there by the hour and watch them. When he arrived they began to twitter, for they knew him, and he knew them, too. He would point out to me which family inhabited such and such a tree. He even seemed to be able to distinguish each individual starling belonging to a group. It was in the afternoon of the thirty-first of March, 1894. He was visibly pleased with the chorus of welcome which greeted his arrival on the part of the birds. 'How happy they are!' he said. 'They know nothing of the troubles of this world. They are well fed, and they love those who are kind to them, and in their turn are grateful for kindness.'"—[Sidney Whitman, in Harper's for November.

THE SIERRA SQUIRRELS.

In the spring, before pine-nuts and hazel-nuts are ripe, the gray squirrel examines last year's cones to see if a few seeds may be left in them between the half-open scales, and gleans fallen nuts and seeds on the ground among the leaves, after making sure that no enemy is nigh. His fine tail floats, now behind, now above him, level or gracefully curled, light and radiant as dry thistledown, every hair in its place standing out electric. His body seems hardly more substantial than his tail. The Douglas is a firm, emphatic bolt of life, fiery, pungent, full of brag and show and fight, and his movements have none of the elegant deliberation of the gray. They are so quick and keen they almost sting the onlooker, and the acrobatic harlequin, gyrating show he makes of himself turns one giddy to see. The gray is shy and often-times stealthy, as if half expecting an enemy in every tree and bush and back of every log; seems to wish to be let alone, and manifests no desire to be seen, or admired, or feared. He is hunted by the Indians, and this of itself is cause enough for caution. The Douglas is less attractive game, and is probably increasing in numbers, in spite of every enemy. He goes his ways bold as a lion, up and down and across, round and round, the happiest, merriest of all the hairy tribe, and at the same time, tremendously earnest and solemn, sunshine incarnate, tingling every tree with his electric toes. If you prick him, you cannot think he would bleed. He seems above the chance and change that beset common mortals, though in busily gathering nuts and nuts we see that he has to work for a living, like the rest of us. I never found a dead Douglas. He gets into the world and out of it without being noticed; only in prime is he seen, like some little plants that never are noticed except when in bloom.—[John Muir, in November Atlantic.

THE PASSING OF THE TRAPPER.

With the passing of the old-fashioned trapper we lose one of the most picturesque figures that ever trod the stage of worldly action or graced the page of fiction. Even the armored knight, with all his atmosphere of romance, his dashing courage, his bravery of gay trappings and tossing plumes, will not outlive the wonderful weather-beaten figure of the iron man in deerskin, who so often has held the centre of the stage during the most thrilling dramas of our earlier history.

Who does not love and cherish the memories of the Leatherstockings—the taciturn, sinewy men, almost childish in their simplicity, almost womanish in their faithful devotion, almost God-like in their fearless power, patience, charitableness and inexhaustible resource? And we of America should never forget these men, for to their daring courage and steadfast purpose we owe much of our present prosperity.

In the circle of the council, in the tumult of the skirmish, in the glare of burning cabins, on the trail of the despoiler, at the head of the army, in the mists of the rapids, in the shadows of the forests, in the sunshine of the prairies, on the summits of the mountains, the buckskin-clad figure was always be found advising, aiding and leading for the good of men to come.

As civilization slowly crept westward and northward its guide and guarantee was a glimpse of the buckskin hunting shirt and the echo of the old, long rifle. Far in advance stole the trapper, blazing trails to the fatlands, locating the sweet waters, learning the resources and mysteries of the new regions. The amount of good these men accomplished can hardly be over-estimated; they were the pioneers of progress upon this continent.—[Ed. W. Smidys, in Outing.

INDIANS PROGRESSING.

Reports of Agents Generally of an Encouraging Nature.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 31.—The majority of the annual reports of the Indian agents to the commissioners of Indian affairs are of an encouraging nature, and indicate a progress generally along civilized lines. Some of the reports, however, are not so gratifying, and make surprising statements.

Unusual in an official document is the following arraignment in the report of E. M. Yeorian, in charge of the Lemhi agency in Idaho: "These Indians as a tribe are honest and peaceable and kindly disposed, but are about as degraded and ungrateful a set as one finds. They have been humored and, like spoiled children, want things their way, and their condition, mode of living and barbaric practices would indicate that undue concessions have been made on the part of agents. In 1882 I find that twenty-nine Indian families were engaged in farming; fifteen years afterwards I can report but forty-one following agricultural pursuits, an increase of twelve—not quite one convert a year. A majority seem to content themselves with their present condition, and continue on in the old channel, leading a life of idleness and degradation."

Agent Wisdom of the Union agency, Indian Territory, in charge of the five civilized tribes, makes a strong plea for the non-citizen insane persons residing in the agency, and says the Kee-Too-Wahs, the full blooded society which led the opposition to the Cherokees treating with the Dawes commission are re-considering their action, and that an agreement with the Cherokees at an early date is possible.

J. R. Jewell, in charge of the New York agency, says: "The Senecas on the Allegheny and the Cattaragus reservations are a corporate body, under the name of the Seneca Nation of Indians, and have a common interest in the lands of both reservations. The better class of Indians are not numerous enough to overcome the power of these corrupt Indians who have the funds of the nation with which to corrupt the masses and perpetuate their corrupt dynasty. The present dynasty is composed of the most progressive of the Indians, but their progress seems to be directed toward absorbing for themselves and misappropriating all the funds of the nation. At the last election, in May, 1898, which I was ordered to attend, this executive committee, to which had been voted a large sum of money, was openly using it to purchase votes."

ICE MAKING IN THE YUKON.

Dozen River Steamers Fast on Sand Bars and Likely to be Lost.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 31.—Ice was making on the Yukon and there was thin ice in Dutch harbor when the Portland sailed, October 11. At least a dozen river steamers are stuck on sand bars in the Yukon, and all will probably be lost. The Dawson City is a total wreck, the Hermann and Tacoma are aground, and the other boats are in such perilous positions that when the ice breaks up they may go to pieces. All the treasure on steamer Portland was one box of gold dust and nuggets, consigned to the Alaska Commercial Company; its value is believed to be $10,000. Several returning miners were on the vessel, but they carried their wealth in the form of drafts and were reticent regarding the amount.

Will Accept the Bishopric of North Dakota.

CHICAGO, Oct. 31.—Rev. Dr. Samuel C. Edsall, rector of St. Petersburg Protestant Episcopal church in this city, announces that he has decided to accept the bishopric of North Dakota proffered to him by the convention held recently in Washington. Dr. Edsall says he will remain rector of the church which he founded until a date in January yet to be fixed, when the consecration will take place. Dr. Edsall hopes this ceremony will be held in St. Petersburg Church. The bishop will make a trip to North Dakota in two weeks.

COLONEL WARING'S REPORT PRACTICALLY COMPLETED.

Colonel Waring's report on his investigations in Havana and his suggestions as to sanitary improvements in that city for President McKinley was practically completed before his death. Thursday last he wanted a stenographer sent for that he might finish it, but was too weak to allow of it at that time. Dr. Stimson, however, said that the President can obtain all the information Colonel Waring had gathered essentially from the report as it stands. Colonel Waring had three copies of his report made. They will be forwarded to Washington at an early date, but will first be thoroughly disinfected.

The ashes of Colonel Waring remained Sunday at Swinburne island. What disposition will be made of them has not yet been decided upon by Mrs. Waring. On account of the expressed wish of Colonel Waring, there will be no public funeral, as he often said that he wished his obsequies to be of the simplest character. President Murphy of the health board said that the ashes of Colonel Waring will remain at Swinburne island, awaiting instructions from Mrs. Waring. The ashes were placed in an urn temporarily.

Mrs. Waring spent Sunday at the home of Dr. Stimson, with her son, John P. Yates.

The quarantine was lifted in the house in which Colonel Waring died at noon Sunday.

A German biologist has calculated that the human brain contains 300,000,000 nerve cells, 5,000,000 of which die and are succeeded by new ones every day. At this rate, assuming the correctness of the German's guess, we get an entirely new brain every sixty days.

MASON FOR MAYOR.

Named as the Candidate by the Republican Convention.

Tickets for Municipal Honors Nominated by the Two Parties.

The Republican city convention completed its business at the adjourned meeting at the State House Saturday evening, when Mr. A. Livingston Mason was unanimously nominated for mayor.

The convention was called to order by its chairman, Mr. William Hamilton, who stated that the delegates had assembled to hear the report of the committee appointed to present the name of a candidate for mayor. Dr. Frederick Bradley, in behalf of the committee, presented the following report:

"Mr. Chairman: To my regret the committee appointed last Thursday evening has asked me to present its report. I do it with some hesitancy, because, unlike the gentleman who made a nominating speech in this room very recently and boasted it was the fourth time he had done so, I must confess it is something new for me to attempt, and because of my unfamiliarity with the usages of such meetings I ask your patience.

"And right here, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the convention, let me ask your attention to a still farther contrast between that other convention and nomination with this convention and nomination. I feel that I am justified in saying the tone of that nominating speech was quite in favor of a liberal or in other words a lax interpretation and administration of the laws—practically what is termed a wide-open city. I am quite sure I voice the feeling among a large majority of the Republican voters in the city of Newport, who desire at the hands of the executive a strict and impartial interpretation of the laws. I fully believe, Mr. Chairman, that a large majority of the residents and citizens of Newport will subscribe to the sentiment that it is the function of government to make it as hard as possible for wrong doers to do wrong, and as easy as possible to do right.

"Speaking then for the nominating committee, I would say we are going to put in nomination the name of a gentleman who stands for character, whose position, mentally, morally, ethically and socially fits him eminently for the position of mayor; a gentleman who with others of his family has rendered such a service to the sick and suffering of our returning soldiers, the men who stood so bravely behind the guns, that every patriot, whether soldier, sailor or civilian, will fully appreciate. This gentleman has been identified with no ring, clique or section of the Republican party, but has been a consistent Republican from the birth of the party. I believe that any one who is anxious for the highest interests of this beautiful city by the sea, no matter what may have been his previous affiliations, or whomsoever he may have voted for heretofore, will feel glad of the opportunity to cast a ballot for this candidate.

"Mr. Chairman, I have the pleasure of placing before this convention, as the Republican candidate for mayor, the name of A. Livingston Mason."

The nomination of Mr. Mason was made by acclamation, and the announcement was followed by applause by the delegates and the few spectators present.

The chairman asked if there was any other business. Mr. James W. Johnson, a delegate from the Fourth ward, asked for an opportunity to speak, and said that he trusted the Republican party would not sell itself out this time, as there is a chance to reclaim the city. Newport has long enough been disgraced with its open saloons and crowds going in and out of them every Sunday. The saloons are open every Sunday all over the city, and it is a shame that respectable people, who wish to observe the Sabbath quietly, are obliged to see drunken men reeling about the streets and crowds going in and out of the saloons unrestricted. It is time that we had a new order of things in Newport.

The speech was heartily applauded and with it the convention was adjourned.

R. I.

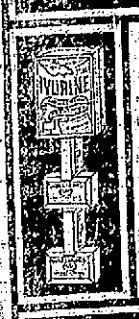

The Republican Candidate.

Arthur Livingston Mason, the nominee of the Republicans for mayor, was born in Providence February 24, 1852, son of Earl P. and Lucy Ann Mason, coming from a long line of English ancestry of prominence. He received his early education in the private schools of Providence, studied three years in France and Germany and then in Mowry & Goff's school in Providence, in 1870 taking a special course in Brown University. From 1871 to 1873 he worked in a woolen mill to learn the details of the manufacture of woolen goods, and then became a partner in the firm of Needham, Mason & Co. In 1870, upon his father's death, he was appointed one of the trustees of the estate, holding that position for ten years. When the property was merged into the Earl P. Mason Land Company he was elected vice president of the corporation. He was also a trustee of the estate of Isaac Hurlshorn in 1877, and in 1883 was secretary of the Rhode Island Locomotive Works. In 1883 Mr. Mason was elected treasurer and general manager of the Continental Steamboat Company. He instituted many changes and reforms, and the business gradually increased and the fleet of boats was augmented. During his administration several lines of opposition steamboats were satisfactorily disposed of, the entire floating indebtedness was retired and the company was put upon a permanent dividend-paying basis.

He has been a member of the Providence Art Club, the Lincoln Library Association, the Hope Club, the Rhode Island Historical Society, the New York Society of the Sons of the Revolution, and the corporation of the Providence Lying-in Hospital, and was the founder of the Providence Symphony Orchestra

HEART DISEASE.

SOME FACTS REGARDING THE RAPID INCREASE OF HEART TROUBLES.

Do Not be Alarmed But Look For the Cause.

Heart troubles, at least among Americans, are certainly increasing and while this may be largely due to the excitement and worry of American business life, it is more often the result of weak stomachs, of poor digestion.

Real, organic heart disease is incurable; but not one case in a hundred of heart trouble is organic.

The close relation between heart trouble and poor digestion is because both organs are controlled by branches of the same great nerves, the Sympathetic and Pneumogastric.

In another way, also the heart is affected by that form of poor digestion, which causes gas and fermentation from half digested food; there is a feeling of oppression and heaviness in the chest caused by pressure of the distended stomach on the heart and lungs, interfering with their action; hence arises palpitation and short breath.

Poor digestion also poisons the blood, makes it thin and watery, which irritates and weakens the heart.

The most sensible treatment for heart trouble is to improve the digestion and to insure the prompt assimilation of food.

This can best be done by the regular use after meals, some safe, pleasant and effective digestive preparation, like Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, which may be found at most drug stores and which contain valuable, harmless digestive elements in a pleasant, convenient form.

It is safe to say that the regular, persistent use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at meal time will cure any form of stomach trouble except cancer of the stomach.

Full sized package of the tablets sold by druggists at 50 cents.

Little book on stomach troubles mailed free. Address Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

MASON FOR MAYOR.

und for many years its business manager.

He has made Newport his home since 1894, occupying "Halidon Hill," the residence of the late Isaac Hathaborn, whose daughter he married. Since coming to Newport he has been interested in public affairs, although having never held public office. During the past summer he and his wife have been active in the care of the sick and wounded soldiers who have been brought here for treatment, going on nearly every one of the expeditions to Montauk Point, and opening their cottage on Halidon hill as a convalescent home for those of the soldiers who had recovered sufficiently to be removed from the hospital. He was an active member of the committee on the fetes and illuminations in honor of the New York Yacht Club in 1896 and 1897, and did excellent service as chairman of the sub-committee on harbor illumination.

The Tickets.

The time for filing nominations for the municipal election expired Saturday night at 12 o'clock, and all were in the hands of the city clerk by that time. The Republican candidates for mayor, city treasurer, school committee, aldermen, common councilmen, wardens and clerks are those nominated in the city convention and ward caucuses. The Democrats, who in their caucuses made no council nominations in the First, Second and Third wards, also presented a list of candidates. They made no nomination for city treasurer against John S. Coggeshall the Republican nominee, and filed partial council tickets in the upper wards. In the First they made no nomination for alderman against Robert P. Hamilton, but named a full ticket for the common council, containing the names of Charles F. Davenport, James Goldie and George W. Valentine. In the Second they nominated one candidate, William E. Mumford being named for third councilman against David Stevens, the Republican nominee. In the Third ward they named a full ticket, including James Graham for alderman, Theodore R. Heine, John H. Cottrell and Max Muenchinger for councilmen.

The Republicans filed no nominations for alderman and common councilmen in the Fifth, and none for warden and clerk in either the Fourth or the Fifth, while the Democrats filed no nominations for warden and clerk in the First, Second or Third wards. WILHELMINA, THE IMPERIOUS.

The late King of the Netherlands lost no opportunity of impressing on his daughter Wilhelmina an idea of her great importance. On one occasion Baroness Van H—— was taking the prescribed promenade with the young princess when a man on horseback appeared. It was the baroness' brother, who had just returned from Java. Leaping from his horse, he clasped his sister in his arms, covering her face with kisses. Wilhelmina, who was seven at the time, was thoroughly scandalized, and the baroness hastened to send off her brother. Not another word was spoken, and the walk being ended they returned to the palace.

The little girl recounted the story which the queen listened to attentively, thinking of the late king and his thick cane. "Finish your luncheon," she said to her daughter; "I will speak to the king."

"It is for me to speak. Papa made me promise never to hide anything from him."

"Your father was in good health then; now he is very ill, and I forbid you to trouble him." Without reply, the little girl rose and went toward the door. "Princess, the Queen of Holland orders you to stay here and keep silent," said Queen Emma.

Wilhelmina stopped, drew back, then, making a profound courtesy, said: "Since it is the queen who gives the order, I obey, but"—turning toward the trembling governess—"I hope such a thing will never occur again."—[San Francisco Argonaut.

MUSICAL MAGAZINES.

The second and third issues of Musical America are as full of interest as the first number promised. It is an excellent magazine, and well edited, and there ought to be plenty of room for such, since it is the duty of every musician, or student of music, to keep in touch with the musical world, to be familiar with names and happenings outside his own little parish, and a weekly reading of Musical America, published at the same price as the Courier, but in rather more convenient form, will be a distinct help in this line.

The October Dominion contains two new marches for orchestra—"Overland," by R. G. Morse, and "The Filibuster," by R. H. Barker—and for full band "The Conqueror" march, by W. A. Corey. There is a good deal of interesting minor musical matter and gossip, including an interview with the famous bandmaster, Victor Herbert.

The Pianist and Organist for September—October contains, in the way of music, a new minuet by Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, and the Chopin mazurka in B flat major, op. 7, No. 1. These are surely good enough, and nothing poorer is to be expected from the official journal of the American Guild of Organists and the New York State Music Teachers' Association. Very timely and to the point are the articles on "Musical Monstrosities" and Consecutive Fifths." In the latter, especially, much is said concerning music and morals that has long needed to be said. The organ department is edited by Gerrit Smith, and that is enough said. There are a full description and specifications of the fine new organ at the South Congregational Church, New Britain, Conn., which is the second largest in New England. There are portraits and sketches of Mrs. Beach and Mme. Marie van Duyn, and a report of the eleventh annual meeting of the New York teachers' association; also a supplement, portrait of Marcella Sembrich. The low price, at which the Pianist and Organist is issued brings it within the reach of all.

THE HEAVENS IN NOVEMBER.

The advance guard of the great meteor swarm is due in November, and on the nights of the thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth astronomers in all parts of the earth will be on the lookout. They will be both surprised and disappointed if a meteoric spectacle, which may be a brilliant one, is not beheld by some of the watchers. The main swarm of the meteors is not due until November, 1899, but their advancing columns, broken into parallels and separated by considerable gaps, occupy so much space on the celestial highways they traverse that millions of the mysterious little bodies must already have reached the neighborhood of the earth's orbit, and it can hardly happen that many of those will not become entangled by the terrestrial attraction, and dart their fiery spears through the upper air.

The reader may like to be reminded that this, the greatest known "meteor shower," has a period of thirty-three and a fourth years; that the history of these meteors has been traced back to the year A. D. 123, when the planet Uranus is believed to have captured the wanderers and turned them into a permanent orbit around the sun; that a comet (Tempel's) is known to be traveling in the same orbit with them, and that the world was astonished with the magnificence of the displays which they made in 1833 and 1866. At their return in 1900 changes had taken place in the array of the meteors, indicating a considerable scattering, and in November, 1867, enormous bodies of them were still rushing across the earth's orbit, and another splendid display occurred.

That point in the heavens from which the meteors appear to radiate is situated within the curved blade of the imaginary "sickle" which marks the constellation Leo. This is not well risen until midnight, but late in the evening meteors radiating from it may be seen shooting upward from the northeastern horizon. Observers are advised to begin watching for them about 11 p. m. November 13, keeping up the watch for five nights, and continuing it until the morning twilight begins. Fortunately, there will be no trouble from the moon, which is "new" on the thirteenth.

The November meteors are very swift in movement, since the earth meets them "head on," and they frequently exhibit bright colors and leave brilliant trains. The Harvard College Observatory offers to send maps and forms of record to all who will take part in systematic observation of the meteors.

If the expected display on the thirteenth or fourteenth does not equal expectation, another chance will be presented on the night of the twenty-seventh, when the celebrated Andromeda meteors are due. These are believed to be part of the debris of the vanished comet of Biela, and they furnished dazzling spectacles in 1872 and 1885. Their period is thirteen years. During the shower of 1885 an iron meteor, supposed to belong to the Andromeda swarm, and subsequently famous under the name of "a piece of Biela's comet," fell at Mazapil, in northern Mexico. Unlike the November 13 meteors, which are known as the Leonids, the Andromeda meteors are slow, because they overtake instead of meeting the earth. Their color is frequently reddish. The full moon will interfere with the observation of these meteors, whose radiant point is overhead between 9 and 10 o'clock in the evening.

Mercury is an evening star, but does not attain its greatest eastern elongation until early in December. It moves from Libra into Sagittarius.

Venus ends its career as an evening star with the last day of the month. It is in the constellation Scorpio.

Mars, in the constellation Cancer, rises about 9 p. m. in the middle of the month.

Jupiter has become a morning star in Virgo, but is too near the sun for satisfactory observation.

Saturn remains on the borders of Scorpio and Ophiuchus, slowly moving eastward. It is still an evening star, but, like Jupiter, too near the sun to be well seen.

Uranus passes from the evening into the morning sky on the twenty-fifth, and is hidden in the solar rays.

Neptune, in Taurus, rises early in the evening, but being invisible to the naked eye, possesses little interest for the amateur star gazer.

Several planetary conjunctions occur in November. On the eleventh, at 10 p. m., Mercury and Uranus meet; on the eighteenth, at 1 p. m., Mercury and Saturn; on the twentieth, at 5 a. m., Mercury and Venus; on the twenty-fourth, at 3 a. m., Venus and Saturn.

New moon occurs on the thirteenth about 7 p. m.; first quarter on the twentieth at noon; full moon on the twenty-seventh, at midnight; last quarter on the sixth, at 9 a. m. The moon is nearest the earth on the sixteenth, and farthest from it on the fourth.

The lunar conjunctions with the planets occur as follows: Neptune on the third, Mars on the fifth, Jupiter on the twelfth, Uranus on the fourteenth, Mercury on the fourteenth, Saturn on the fifteenth, Venus on the fifteenth, Neptune again on the twenty-ninth.

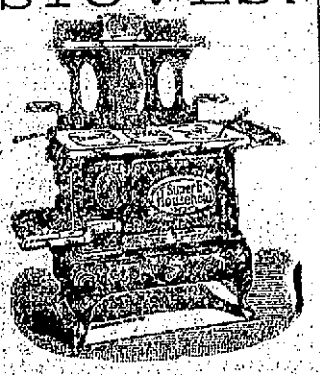

There will be minima of the variable star Algol on the fourteenth at 8:23 p. m., and the eleventh at 11:35 p. m.

The wonderful variable Mira Ceti, having reached it maximum in October, should be seen fading during November.

The winter constellations are advancing into view, but will be better seen and described in November.—[Garrett P. Serviss, in Scientific American.

NEW YORK, Oct. 31, Wall Street—The stock market opened steady, with Burlington at 115⅝, Louisville 60, Manhattan 95⅝, Northern Pacific 40⅝, People's Gas 103½, Rock Island 103, Sugar 113⅝, St. Paul 100⅝, Southern preferred 34⅝, Tobacco 137½, and Union Pacific preferred 64½.

10—Changes in the important railroads at the opening were small and mixed, many stocks opening unchanged. Great Western preferred A was an exception, with a gain of a point. A number of the specialties advanced, Tobacco rising 1½, and Sugar and Federal Steel preferred about ½.

11—The market took a spurt upward on large dealings after the opening, in which some of the usually less active shares figured prominently. Tennessee Coal and Louisville gained a point, and improvement of equal importance were made elsewhere. The grangers gained sharp fractions and decided strength was also manifest in Sugar, Tobacco, Brooklyn Transit and Federal Steel.

BAD PRINCIPLES, NOT BAD MEN.

Dr. McClelland on "The Real Enemy in the Battle Royal."

At the Sunday morning service in the United Congregational Church, Rev. Dr. McClelland took for his theme: "The Real Enemy in the Battle Royal." The text was Ephesians VI:12-13. He began by saying: "Paul's spirit was martial. Conversion did not change his nature; it simply swung his trolley the other way. Paul the aged is still the soldier of the cross. The doom of bleeding is on him. He has received orders calling him home for promotion. But you feel that you are in the presence of a young hero who is reading, with a flash of joy, his first commission. God is in arms, so God's man can't be on a peace footing. Who is the foe? Not men, not conditions, but vast underlying evil principles. The battle royal is a spiritual battle. To be fought in God's way, that means unmitigated opposition, unrelenting thoroughness, personal sacrifice."

Applying this principle with its inferences to the matter of municipal reform, the preacher said among other things: "The struggle of reform is not with men in themselves; it is with the greed, the selfishness, the falsehood, behind the man. The real peril of all reform is that it will exhaust itself in personal attacks on men and institutions. If our city has some public officials who are unfaithful to their trust, who not only violate law but encourage its blasphemy, who by reason of ungoverned appetite make of themselves unseemly spectacles, and our city a by-word and a hissing—if there are such men in the high places of the municipal life, our contention is not with them, but our face is against the moral indifference which makes their election a certainty, with the gross spiritual apathy of those who are not offended by such degradation, with the spirit of treachery which sees in public service opportunity for personal aggrandizement. Never can there come lasting reform until we realize that the other belligerent is the spiritual wickedness of which bad men, illegal traffic, and debasing institutions are the flesh and blood.

"The moral champion has got to be possessed with the spirit of unmitigated opposition to every evil. Not by crime itself has the cause of right been so retarded as by action on the theory: 'of two evils choose the less.' It is luck of moral sand which has lost the empire of honor many a foot of possible territory. Reform has no place for diplomats, its commissions are to soldiers. You can never have a clean city and tolerate 'deals' and 'combines'. I don't care if it be a national office that is at stake, one little compromise will lead to final failure. 'Once in your municipal politics, for fear of getting no apple you took the half, and now you haven't the core.

"And then again the need is unrelenting thoroughness. Just be satisfied with removing a dozen evil men from office, with closing a dozen vicious haunts, and misery may be reduced for a moment, but the spirits of sinful appetite and selfish impulse, which are the forbears of misery, robbed of their children, will bring forth other litter as fearful in their powers of mischief and bane."

Here Dr. McClelland referred to the return of the Tammany ring to the control of affairs in New York city, and showed how this was simply because "the moral tether had not been watched for slack. Vigilance, every one at it, and always at it, is the only way to put out the fire, to stamp out the plague, to, overcome the unseen power of wickedness which incarnates itself in willing flesh and blood. But this means personal cost, it means each citizen getting down out of his comfortable nest and "taking his share of the hardship; not being satisfied to stay at home in Nazareth, but to go about doing good; going where you can't help getting dust on your skirts; working in the mire and at the mire until there shall be no more filth to bespatter the moral raiment of the municipal life. There are but two sides in God's battles. And you can't be on both. To tolerate the side He is against is to take up arms for the cause of crime, dishonor, and falsehood to faith and Fatherland."

AROUND RHODE ISLAND.

An electric car was run from Howard to Natick over the new line for the first time Saturday afternoon, and Sunday the cars began making regular trips between Natick and Providence.

E. Rowland Phillips, son of E. F. Phillips, superintendent of the American Electrical Works, has been appointed postmaster of Phillipsdale, East Providence. The appointee is vice president and manager of the works.

The kindergartens of Providence reopened today. A special meeting of the executive committee of the school committee was held Saturday afternoon to consider a proposition made from the kindergarten teachers to give their services gratuiously for the next month, with a hope that the tangled state of affairs at present existing may be straightened out in the interim. After some discussion the offer was accepted.

The weather has been so stormy during the past two weeks that the construction of the new marine railway for hauling out yacht Defender at the Herreshoff works at Bristol has been much delayed. Captain Terry's men were obliged to suspend operations in driving spiles a number of times, owing to heavy winds and rough water, which precluded the possibility of the spile driver lying steadily in one place. The last of the spiles are now almost in place, and the third section of railway is being shipped upon one of the wharves. It is 125 feet in length. All of the present week and a good part of next week will be consumed in finishing the job under construction.

Alexander Mackay Smith, D. D. At the close of the services in the chapel adjournment will be made to the new library room, where addresses will be made by others of the alumni.

MAYOR STRONG ON COLONEL WARING.

Ex-Mayor Strong, commenting on the death of Colonel Waring, said:

"The death of Colonel Waring came to me like a thunder-clap out of a clear sky. My wife and some friends called at the house last night to see how Colonel Waring was getting along, and were told by the man at the door that Colonel Waring was improving and was not considered in any great danger.

"I was not acquainted with Colonel Waring until I became mayor. In December of 1894, when I was looking around for a proper person to clean the streets of the city of New York, Colonel Waring was suggested. He was introduced to me and spent an evening at my house. I became convinced then that he was just the man I wanted.

"Colonel Waring assumed the place of commissioner of street cleaning January 15, 1895, and by the middle of May the streets were all cleaned for the first time in the history of the city of New York. He was a thorough disciplinarian, and brought order out of chaos in his department, and in six months uniformed his entire force in white, and they became known as 'Waring's White Wings of Cleanliness.' "This was, I think, the first time that any street-cleaning department anywhere was uniformed.

"As a sanitary engineer I doubt if Colonel Waring had an equal in this or any other city, and I am quite sure he had no superior. He was a thoroughly educated and intelligent man, and he brought his education and intelligence into requisition not only in cleaning the streets, but for the disposition of the garbage. If he had had time to perfect his system the entire work would have been self-supporting and perhaps would have yielded an income to the city.

"Colonel Waring was an untiring worker, perfectly honest and truthful, and I think will always be remembered by the city as the first man who ever thoroughly organized the street cleaning department and made every man in his employ feel that he was an American citizen equal to any other American citizen.

"I have never before made this public, but Colonel Waring was frequently consulted by sanitary engineers of other cities, and had two or three opportunities of taking hold of the work in other cities at two or three times the salary he was receiving in this city. He declined them all, believing that the great work accomplished in this city would eventually be appreciated by the city of New York and rewarded. While his salary was small, the work he did was really great, and his fame will live and grow brighter as the years roll on.

"Socially Colonel Waring was a genial man and greatly beloved by all who enjoyed his acquaintance, his hospitality and his good offices. He was a brilliant conversationalist, and his flashes of wit and humor were much enjoyed. My personal relations with him were most agreeable. He will be remembered by the city of New York for his intelligent and faithful work. I shall always remember Colonel Waring with a great deal of pleasure, and sincerely regret his death."

WILL OF JAMES O. SWAN.

Bequests to Relatives Amounting in the Aggregate to $175,000.

In the probate court this morning the petition of the guardian of Emily H. Hathaway, Bradford Hathaway and Mary Hathaway for permission to sell real estate for better investment was granted. The petition for the probate of the will of John W. Detwiller and for letters of administration with will annexed was continued to November 7.

On the new docket the inventory of the estate of Thomas Coggeshall was received and ordered recorded; the guardian's annual account with the estate of Isaac S. Sayer was continued to November 21; the petition of the guardian of the estate of Isaac S. Sayer for approval of the sale of personal property was granted, and the petition for the probate of the will of James C. Swan and for letters testamentary thereon was continued to November 21.

The will of Mr. Swan makes no public bequests, and gives $175,000 outright to relatives. It was signed February 14, 1888, and witnessed by F. B. Peckham, Grant P. Taylor and Edwin S. Burdick. Job A. Peckham and Lewis L. Simmons are named as executors and trustees, and are not required to give bonds or file an inventory. The will gives $5,000 each to Anna Burrington, Henry S. Peckham, Job A. Peckham, Alexander Peckham, Elizabeth S. Peckham and James Peckham, children of his sister, Elizabeth Peckham; $5,000 each to Belle Taber, Richard Taber and James C. Taber, children of his sister, Caroline Taber; $15,000 each to Edward P. Swan and George L. Swan, children of his deceased brother, Edwin Swan; $10,000 to his sister, Elizabeth Peckham; $25,000 to his sister, Caroline Taber; $10,000 and all the household property to his sister, Sally C. Swan, and $25,000 to the children of his deceased nephew, Richard Swan. The rest and residue of the estate is bequeathed to his three sisters, Elizabeth Peckham, Caroline C. Taber and Sally C. Swan, or their heirs, in equal shares of one-third each.

The will provides for a trust of $25,000 for the nephew, Richard Swan, but also provides that upon his death it is to be given direct to his children. Richard Swan's death preceded that of his uncle and the bequest goes, without condition, to the children, of whom there are three.

The will contains a clause which directs that any heir who begins suit against, or otherwise opposes, the probate of the will shall be deprived of his or her share of the bequests.

FIRE AT THE ROYAL PHELPS CARROLL HOUSE.

Several hundred dollars' worth of damage was done to Royal Phelps Carrol's dining room and adjacent parts of the house on Clay street, by smoke, water and fire at an early hour this morning. It was 4:17 o'clock when box 52 began to strike, and some minutes later when it stopped, for it went around twice giving eight rounds on all but the 4's bell.

The firemen upon arrival found the house to be well filled with smoke and there was a fierce heat in the dining room while in the unfinished part beneath there was a lively blaze in the floor beams. Except below, the fire was in the partition above the large fireplace, and considerable water was required in both places. As the dining room is in a one-story addition the fire did not spread to other parts of the house.

The parlor was connected by a folding doorway, which was finally closed, but some water and much smoke entered through this, injuring furnishings. The dining room was handsomely furnished and contained many costly paintings and handsome heads of the beasts of forest, all of which suffered from heat and smoke. The loss is covered by insurance through the agencies of DeBlois & Eldridge and Henry Bull, Jr. Just what it will amount to cannot now be estimated, but it will be quite heavy.

STYLE IN GOLF.

Uniformity in style is not an essential to the game of golf—the short swing of Hoylake is as effective as the heel-tapping swing of old St. Andrew's—but it must be a golfing style, not one that suggests either baseball, cricket, racquets or tennis. There are men who play well in the most heedless of self-taught styles, like Arthur H. Fenn, who is still the best player the United States has yet brought out, although no longer eligible to amateur competitions; but his strokes are made with an ease and steadiness that is in itself graceful. To most men who take up the game over thirty, when the muscles and joints are set, like Fenn, Travis, Thorp, Keene, Tyng or Toler, execution must be cultivated at the expense of the graces. The one great desideratum is that the club head shall move with the ball at the impact—even in jerk strokes—and shall follow after it as far as possible. Those who fairly meet and follow through in each stroke, even though the method may suggest a gymnastic feat, may attain a considerable degree of proficiency, but—and this is the one great lesson of the Morris, Conify championship—they must succumb in the competitive phase of the game to the youths, whose supple muscles have made possible a style orthodox in every detail. How many of our older set who qualified this year will be among the elect in 1899? Yet—and this is the great glory of golf—when their day of competitive prominence passes they will be the better for the knowledge of the most healthful and rational of games. They may tramp the links, over greens bordered by forests and with great mountains in the distance, or through park-like lawns, or where sea and river bound the view, and gain a pleasure that never cloys or punishes. There is no senility in golf.—H. W. FitzPatrick, in Outing for November.
